the Burd Book 506

the Burd Book 506

Caroloiades,

OR,

The Rebellion of Forty One.

In Ten Books.

A Heroick POEM.

Virg. Encid. Lib. 2.

quis talia fando

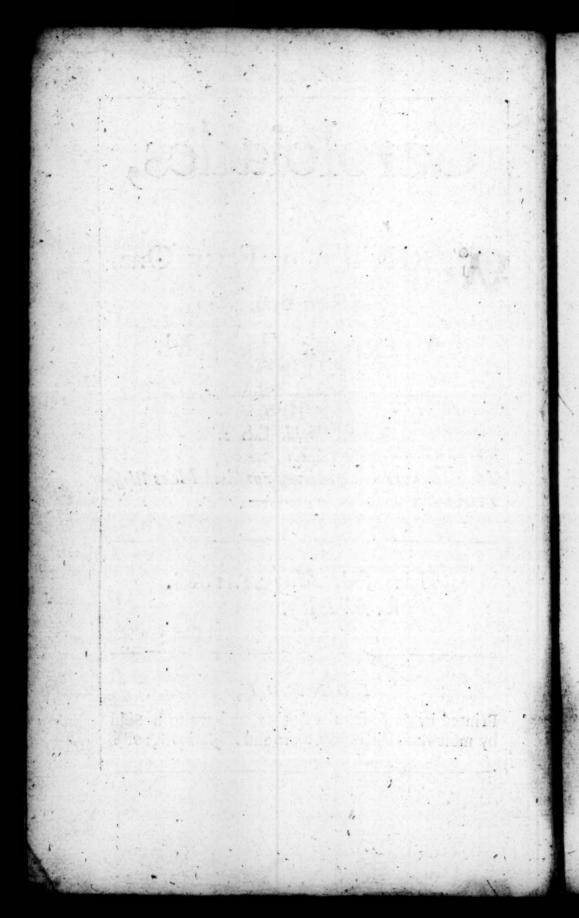

Mirmidomum, delapumve, aut duri Miles Ulyss

Temperet a lachrymis——

Licensed, May 22. 1688. R. Midgley.

LONDON,

Printed by J. B. for the Author, and are to be Sold by most Booksellers in London and Westminster, 1689.

Care might favour

PREFACE.

THofoever has Inspected the History of that Unhappy War which commenc'd in the time of King Charles the First, will grant that its wonderfull and various events adminster as much Subject for a Poem of this Nature as has been Grounded on former Story: However deplorable the disparity may be as to our Historical facts and revolutions, in regard that these, from their horrid effects and contrivance, appear less credible then true, and propably shall have no future Parallel.

That the Character of that Sovereign, which, gives a Denomination to this Poem, may with no less Magnitude (confidering the Excellency and Grandeur of his Endowments ) be as renown'd a figure for Heroick Poefy, as any which Homer or Virgill have attributed to the Greatest of their Heroes must be granted by all that are, not Ignorant of their Nations Glory, or detractive from the Fame of that Incomparable King.

I fhall not prefume to adorn my Preface by displaying the especial and various dignities of Heroick

Heroick Poefy which in my Case might savour of Ostentation, or not unlike an Architect that should endeavour to applaud some high performance of his Science to Insinuate his own defert in a work of the same Intendment: Being rather desirous to referr my Reader to what the Judicious have Celebrately express'd, in reference to this extraordinary sort of Poesy, without giving it any other Panygerick from my Pen. However I stand oblig'd so far to Vindicate my undertaking as to shew that it is duly grounded and concenters with such requisites of Invention as have been allowably conceded to perfect an Epique composition.

That this structure has been from the Pens of the most famous Authors, rais'd on some known Historical Truth, as the Basis or fond of such a Poem, is evident from what the first Grandees or Guides of this Science have left to the World.

But if known story gave rise to their design, they rely'd upon the strength of Fiction, in order to the beautifying and compleating the Modell and shape of their contrivance: Not unlike the skillfull Sculpturist, that out of some rough Mass of Stone polisheth and forms his several figures suitable to the representation he Intends them.

True it is that known occurrences may something Agrandize a Poem, and the Readers esteem will be more pathetically moved by Transactions that are within the compass of Man's knowledge,

ledge, however enlarg'd by Poetical License, then what he adjudgeth to be totally Fabulous, being induc'd to accept, on that account, what could not without Intermixtures and supplements of the Muses be elevately convey'd.

Nor did the most remarkable Poets otherwise deliver the essential part of Historical Verity, then accompany'd with Notions whereby they rectify'd the will or practical conduct of the Mind, by improving Moralities to the most usefull and exemplary Comprehension: By which gloss and varnish of Imagination story was acceptably render'd, that otherwise had been restrained by too narrowly Circumscribing the sphere of Invention: and would be no less absurd then to expect a History instead of a Poem, and if it be simply the first it cannot deserve the name of the latter.

Besides, it is very Notorious, that sew Historians compile all considerable deeds or events, whose business is to observe Publique and General occurrences, rather then the particular discovery of Personal concernments as they relate to Characters: Which ought to be the undertaking of the Poet who is Priviledg'd to suppose what he Judgeth should be emphatically declar'd if possibly Cohering or Assimilated to whatsoever might, by way of resemblance, in any respect, be held Creditable; so that any Poetical Assertion, if thus Manag'd, must have a Legitimate Pass port from the Authority of the writer, and this may be Term'd the History of the Poet, without which the vulgar or known cannot have to do with the Muses. Thus it appears that Narrations taken from the Trojan War did rather enlarge then confine the Pens of Homer and Virgil, to which they not only added the Embelishment of their Fiction, but Introduc'd what Characters they held proper to fill up and conspire with the Ornament and vigour of such as had their parts in the subject they treated.

Neither would they limit their Inventions to the Ethical distributions of things, as they Naturally refult from humane Cogitation, but occasionally advanc'd the intellect of the Reader to the most sublime apprehension of such speculations as entertain'd with delight and wonder the contemplative faculty; and this they effected by grounding their Fictions on supernatural Causes and effects consonant to receiv'd Belief: Either as they represented Miracles and Spiritual appearances of good and bad Existencies, as also extraordinary Prodigies, Dreams, Magical Enchantments, Witchcrafts, and the like; that by an admirable Allegory did concurr and agree with the deeds and descriptions of Men.

And were this manner of Writing seperated from the most famous Poets their repute would fall to a far lower Orb of Esteem then the Monuments of their Ingenuity have deservedly Obtain'd; which shews us that they well understood the value of this sort of Invention, and how

how necessary it was to the Royalty of Pernessus.

Another supercilious Mistake has been Improv'd by some from their affected supposition that a Heroick Poem cannot be produc'd, Consonant to Christianity, with that requisite Latitude that was us'd by Poets of Ethnick persuasion.

To answer which conceit, whosever shall undertake to avow it, there is nothing more evident then that all Necessary use and Comprehension of Metaphor and Allegory relating to supernatural power existencies and beings, is as much ours as it was Assistant to the Ancients, tho' redounding from their Largest Catalognes of Deities and Fictions.

And this was well perceiv'd by the late Judicious and Learned French Critique Rapin in his admirable reflections on this fort of Poefy, to whose exquisite observations, not to insert any remarks of Mine, I think fit to referr my Reader.

In the mean time, to come closer to my purpose by alledging such Authorities as have the most undoubted Modern reception: I need but mention the Great Tasso, and our famous Spencer, by whose Poems, the the Productions of Latter Times, and agreable to Evangelical persuasion, it is very clear that neither as to Fiction or Allegory, they wanted any Necessary Ingredients or supplements, if compar'd with such Poets who had been precedent to Christian Belief. I shall not present my Reader with any Inspections into the Poem of Spencer, it being upon the matter wholly Allegory, and A 4 therefore not so proper to the Application I intendi But as for Taffo, his Poem, tho' appertaining to Christian Archievements, and a Modern Story perfectly known to Chronology as any extant, is Intermix'd with as many Episods and speculative Allegories as he could with any conveniency find room for in his Godfrey of Bulloigne: Where in his handling of that History, we find that his Muse is conversant with Good and Bad Angells, Miraculous Shapes, Predictions, Dreams, Fantoms, Magical Dialogues, Fafcinations, Flying in the Air, Obscure conveyances of the persons of Men by Diabolical contrivement, the stupendious opening of Trees, that seem'd to disclose objects of wonderfull variety to entertain admiration by rendring of his Characters more superlatively fervable, all which are the main body and defign of his Poem. Yet this was never made his Crime, by what the most accurate Criticks have remark'd on him: perhaps they may have tax'd him for being excessive or tedious in his Narrations and descriptions of this high Import, but never charg'd on him to the diminution of his esteem, or as an Illegitimate License, unbefeeming a Poet. And this our famous Ben. Johnson well understood, whose mature Judgment gave as little room to extravagancies of the Brain as any that preceded him, by his introducing Sylla's Ghost whereby to infuse on the wicked Genius of Cataline a more Hellish and Irresistable Temptation to perfect his Impious defign, which could not not have been so execrably Infinuated by any other Method.

An Example that enough assures us that he approv'd the Allegorical part of Invention, and that it is as Legitimately ours, as it could be claim'd by any of the Ancients, when properly apply'd. I held it convenient to instance these particulars, that the Reader may not wonder if I have in some passages and sictions follow'd the example of so great a Poet, as well as others that samously preceded him in that manner of Contrivement.

It has been erroniously supposed by not a few, that are less knowing then Critical, whereby they render in their Judgments an Epique Poem more difficult to be accomplished, that whatfoever is supernaturall, is therefore Incredible; not considering, that Fiction may imply an imaginary resemblance of truth, in its remotest suppositions, when ally d to the Conceptions and Tenents of Men: And thus Medea might be granted as much a Sorcerels as the Witch of Ender: And Niobe, tho but on the Credit of the Inventor, Poetically held by the decree of Heaven, Metamorphos'd into Marble, no less really effected, then the Transformation of Lot's Wife into a Pillar of Salt.

The only Author, I know of, that has totally relinquish'd Allegory, notwithstanding he gives his Poem of Gundibert a Heroick Title, was the late Sr William Davenant, a person of no ordinary Ingenuity, however he thought fit to decline

this

this manner of Writing, either because he would be singular in his way, or that he design'd to surpass others by producing of something that should be great, without being of kin to the Grandeur of sormer Presidents: But instead of persecting what he intended, the desiciency of his structure was soon perceiv'd by the judicious.

And this appears, because that work of his is wholly diffus'd into sententious Moralities and Actions that have too constant a Tendency to the same Levell of thought, instead of a requisite Intermixture and Elevation of the Mind by entertaining of the spiritual or contemplative faculty.

I am far from making this Inference with any Intention to attract Applaule to my felf, or to lessen the same of that Author, since as his Poem stands composed it has my value: And I well know, notwithstanding the derogations and severities of some, that it contains many exquisite and remote expressions, insomuch that I admire that his undertaking appears so well performed as I find it, however destitute of that resining of speculations and characters which has been the judicious and superlative Management of all that preceded him.

That the Introducing of Heroins was allways held an ornament to Heroique Poely, is evident from the Constant usage and authority of the most Considerable Pens: And their reason I conceive was to Impress a Transcendent value on the splendors of Beauty when accompany'd with Grandeur of mind, and thereby more suitable to the devoirs of their Masculine Admirers: which Celebrated instances are very frequently read in Poets of most repute, as is understood by every eye that is acquainted with their productions. And tho' the Examples are peculiar to some extraordinary Figures of Female greatness, yet not dissentaneous to what has been verify'd from authentique Records, in which we may find not only the daring exploits of a Joan of Orleans, but the prowess of Queens; witness that Gallant Katherine, Wise to our King Henry the Sixth; besides many of every degree that for Martial renown are formerly register'd.

with

This I judge may sufficiently Apologize for what is related, or Character'd by me: especially in that of Flavira, by whose Heroine Description I would be understood to Include the Magnamities of other Noble & Generous personages that might otherwise deserve their particular mention.

And he that has Inform'd himself of the Couragious Actions of some conspicuous of that Sex, besides others of lower Stations, relating to the unfortunate War I write of, will soon grant that their resemblance may claim a signal room in this Poem.

The next thing that I am oblig'd to be accomptable for, is the Liberty I have us'd by representing of Persons by such Nominations and descriptions as are not deriv'd from Historical certainty: And this method I take to be allowable by the practice of all that have Merited the

Esteem of Epique Writers. lo alloys ball of old

As for Proper Names, it must be Granted, if but for the advantage that is in the sound of words as they ought to run in Verse; that our English Tongue does not usually furnish us with such names as are proper for Poetry, as we may observe from every ordinary Argument and Dialogue, that has to do with the Muses, in which Authors Insert or Borrow such denominations of persons as are most suitable to their purpose, and none I believe can with any colour except against the same Liberty I have used here.

If we confider occurrences of whatfoever Magnitude, as they refult from story, they cannot have Latitude enough, as they relate to things and persons, to embody or Capacitate a Poem of this Quality: In respect that no Truth can of it self compleat a Poetical Character, which would on those Terms, in its utmost extent tend to no more then the known sense and concernment of persons, whereby the due Consummating of their figures would be Impair'd, and which can be no way perfected but by the Artifice of Feigning in their behalf to render them more exact and compleat in themselves. A License undoubtedly conceded by all approv'd Criticks, in respect that Persons are deliver'd by that means rather as they ought to be represented then as they are found, or deduc'd from Historical Narrations: By which method the worthily Virtuous are advanc'd to a higher excellency, and the depravations depravations of others deliver'd more perfectly

There is yet a farther advantage that redounds from this Liberty of personating of Characters, in regard that by the aptitude of one person, either in reference to Science, conspicuous deeds, Passions, or affections of the Mind, divers may be signify'd, or in a general Sense describ'd as to whatsoever Emergencies are to be understood that proceed from the sacts or disposition of humane conduct.

And this requisite is pertinent to Poesy grounded on History, since without that additional supplement the most Renowned Personages would appear too solitary figur'd on the Poetick account: Or like an Imperial Palace, that should Consist only of an ontward shell instead of Variety of Apartments, Furniture, and At-

Nor is it a tollerable objection, if any shall undertake to avow it, that because this Poem does contain Transactions that arose within the Compass of the Age we Live in, it should therefore be deny'd the Perquisites of the Muses that were the former ornaments and advantages of Writers; in respect that so much as they us'd of Historical Verity is as fully discernable in them, from what they Poetically annexed, as in any Invention I have Inserted: And there is no Eldership in Wit that can of right Challenge more freedom, in order to Legitimate Fable, then is to be conceded to Modern Ingenuity.

On

On our English Theatre 'tis sufficiently acceptable if the Scene be laid at home, tho' the nomination and facts of Characters be devis'd either as they refemble or enlarge some known Truth: And I affure my felf there is no Man but will grant as full a latitude, if not a greater, in some fense, to a Poem of this contexture then he would allow to any Dramatick Composition. But I have faid enough, as to the substance of what I have here produc'd, to all Candid apprehensions, or fuch as are not refolv'd to be perverse or Ignorant opposers.

And I dare thus far aver in behalf of my Subject. that no Rebellious, & Tragical dissentions, were ever carried on with more Hypocritical pretenfions, Subtle and Treacherous Intrigues; or contrarily more famously replenish'd with Personal Gallantries, or the most touching and Noble Concerns of Duty and Passion, relating to Heroicks of both Sexes, then what was occasion'd by that wicked and unparallel'd War.

And above all for the Eminent display of the furpassing Character of a Monarch, more excellent then fortunate, as I have endeavour'd to Manifest it as highly as my Ability extends, and I wish it could deservedly Erect his Monument of Fame and Glory.

POSTS CRIPT.

Postscript.

H Aving touch'd in general the construction of a Poem of this Nature, I thought fit to annex to my Preface some brief remarks that more particularly relate to the method I have us'd, and what the Critical Reader might Expett for his Satisfaction.

As to my Verse, I have avoided Stanza's; and my reason is, because I conceive them not so proper, as the freedom of Heroick Measures for a Poem of this Structure; and this choice of mine is not only suitable to the manner of Virgil and other Ancient Poets, but agreeable to the most approv'd sense of Modern Criticism: I need not but instance the Judicious Rapin, who assures us that the Compiling of Stanza's was the mistake of some late Italian Poets, who sirst introduc'd them into their Heroick Poems, and that they weaken the beauty and slame of Verse in the length of their periods, on which, for the most part, the main substance of their sense does depend.

And here I cannot but acquint my Reader, that I took care that this work, as it is of great Signification and Import, should be advantaged by the Inspection of some few Persons, which caused me not only to correct but to add some hundreds of Lines; by which means I did, as much as in me lay, Ultimam Manum Imponere.

As for the Moral of my Poem, the Soul of a work of this Consistency, it is Chiefly terminated in the exemplary greatnes and virtues of the Royal Person I have endeavour'd to delineate; whereby the unity of Action and other Accessories, that ought to be Incident to such a Composition, are properly, I conceive, observed : Yet with that Regard to History that the most Considerable Battels and facts of War are either related, or instead of room for all their particulars, which bad been more cumber som to read then necessary to be Inserted in a Poem, Collaterally included by some pertinent and general mention.

And whosoever shall duly Consider what is here deliver'd, as it referrs to deplorable truth: will judge it rather a Divine then a Poetical Summons, to detest those Execrable deeds, Prophanations, and Hypocrifies, that tended to the Subversion of Holy Religion, together with all Moral Obligations of highest Import, as they were at once the Unparallel'd Misfortune.

THE SET TO BUILD and deformity of Three Famous Nations.

Jone do air sind bere I come

To the Worthy Author of Caroloiades Che Ong I expected that First Charles thould Live In fuch a Poem as the World you give. I doll oil His Character fo highly did Excell, word danie or A That I admire to find it Writ forwell visit seine? No Royal worth did e're in King appear on Min W But was in him, and fuch I reade him here, and both And as his Sacred Virtues you rehearles b bluob Jeil T. I fully grant 'em Canoniz'd in Verse. A cuoi ilo 1 His Famous Queen, by you describ'd, I find trignoris 1 Like her felf Beauteous both in form and Mind & Vandiks best Art could neither of em show? 201 21 so far his Pencill does give place to you. Smooth and succinctly great still run your Lines, A Genius in which Wit and Nature shines out han A Tho' hard an Epique Poem tis to Write, and ot an That can with that just Temper raise its height. Our British Heroes, tho' to story known, Have no Record like yours of their Renown. Thus Lucas and brave Lyle to Fame are read, I'm Best as you Write their deeds and what they faid: Whether es, ly,

er

ed e-

1,

Whether as Heroes or as Lovers they By Noblest Passions are express'd your way. The Rebell Patrons, and their dark defigns, Are found by your Clear Lamp that flames in Lines: Stories their Actions but in parcells show, Whilst their Black Souls I fully see from you. And doubtless it approves your Muses skill, That could describe their excellence in Ill. Prodigious Noll, whose rise and wondrous height, I thought too big for the whole Nine to Write, Does from your Muses Grandeur so appear, As he's, full fiz'd, a mighty Villain there. Usefully great your Poem is design'd, And Allegory unto Actions joyn'd, And fure none will of fuch a Muse complain As to Embellish Truth can duly feign. And who would not that Artifice allow, Forfeits his Judgment justly unto you: But what need I prompt Men to do you right. When your Performance value does Invite.

To the Author On his Poem of Caroloiades.

Long the Lower to

Williams much for will Living Planes for

Hen I a Painted story do behold Strongly design'd, and figur'd smoothly bold: I judge it wrought by some prov'd ancient Hand, Whose Skill could Life and nature best Command. But as your Muses Pencill well I view, It renders equall'd Ancient Wit by New, Our Stories figures so in yours are shown, That in their likeness truth more pleas'd I own. If some by travell distant parts have seen, And what their greatness now and past has been; Tet never there, like yours, could poem Read, Written fo well of men alive and dead.

With how much joy will Living Heroes see
Their deeds recorded thus of Gallantry:
And what their Youthfull toyls in Bettells were,
Or Wounds by prowess felt in that times War.
Nor less the lineage of great Captains dead
Will be oblig'd as their fames by you spread.
Thus does your Pen Old Loyalty renew,
And from its patern fortifies the new.

of Skill could I je and notice be I Command the server of alot Percel red I will,

Car it is good a man for from

If form by travel of the real lives fam.

which what electronic and professions and profession because

The never than the latest of the sea Read,

The state of the state of e propiet anrient Hand,

G.M.

Toot dear the of touch in serie of it I own.

To the Author of Caroloiades.

Ho' I no Muse pretend to, as do some That to give Pass-ports unto Wit presume; And judge if their Muse does the Author stroke, The favour, on the World, must pass his Book. I'le leave that part to fuch as can bestow On under-graduate Wit probation for Whilst your works value best it felf Commends, As to Pernaffus top its flame afcends and mile wanted off Morally great, Philosophick, and Divine, and Array Yet nothing tedious in your Grand defign. Throughout your Lines emphatical I let side of builded The Genius of Heroick Poely; anothe ordaily ail A Skill I fometimes thought above the Height and and I Of English Tongue, or Poet best could Write. Fully I wish, to heighten Christian fame, That Brave Lorrain, and Great Bavarias name

Could find a Muse that might their Actions tell High, as your English Heroes do excell. That worth is yet remaining for your glory When your Pen will add Grandeur to their ftory. The Macedonian Victor, who for praise Envy'd the Muse Achilles deeds did raise, and it Unless that fuch a Homer, his might fing, be bad From whose Immortal Verse did tothers spring. Vil out Surpassing either, to the World convey'd, sada orable [ I read First Charles, whose fames by you display'd no Thus brighter oft, in the Caleftial fphere, mov Hinty The Setting Sun then Rifing does appear. Alany of AA Great Maro, to compleat his Trojan Prince, Jan Wilstold From Heavenly race derives his excellence; mailton boy

But had he this Kings attributes renowned, and and and But had he this Kings attributes renowned, and another miss Virtue above Demy-god he'ad found to suino and and Thus far has Caroloiades out done out commissioned I like A Aneidos, the Theam which Virgiblyng not fill and to

Vally, 5 m is, to beighten Christian fame,

That Brave Le rais, and Great Escurise name

blueD

To his Worthy Friend Author of Caroloiades.

SIR,

Ou having been pleased to afford me the perusal of your Poem, aptly stiled Caroloiades, when it was in its first rude, and rough draught, and before it was better shaped and corrected by you, I did freely give my sence and opinion on many passages, and you seldom differed from my sentiments therein. For the I am no great Judge of Poefy (as you may see by my writing to you in Prose) yet I am an Admirer of those refined Wits, who by the sweet harmony of Verse have conserved the History of those Ancient Wars, which might have been loft had they been wrote in Prose; and the Iliads of Homer, and other Antique Writings might have ran the same fate of time, with many other excellent Histories, which perhaps haps perished, because they manted the Spirit and Soul of Poetry to conserve them. The Subject, Sir, on which you have chosen to Write, is worthy of an Heroick Poem; Our Wars more then Civil, with the ultimate Tragedy thereof, is such a period as is sufficient to silence all the Muses, and cause them abruptly to break off in fighs and lamentations. I know not how it comes to pass, that for these Forty Years, since which these Wars have been ended, that none of the Elevated Wits of our Age have taken upon them to describe these mighty Actions in Heroick Verse, untill you happily took up this subject so worthy of your Pen, which I wish may delight as well as inform the World; and that when Histories fail, and are exstinguish'd by time, your Poem may survive and give knowledge of what we have seen to future Ages.

I am,

Your very humble Servant,

Paul Rycaut,

OR,

The Rebellion of England, both Begun in the Year, 1641.

A HEROICK Poem.

The Argument of the First Book,

Unhappy War begun in Forty One,
The Causes Mischiefs, here the Poets Song
Briefly relates: The Houses from their King
Highly divide, whence discords soon increase,
Nourish'd by Pasquills, Libells, Threats, Demands.
Nor Royal Acts of Grace suffice to calm
All-daring Vulgar rage: The Queen departs,
And Heroine-like undannted Seas does pass.

Which did from furious Crimes of Subjects spring;

My Muse presumes here to describe by Verse,

And Hero's deeds of Brave Renown rehearse.

Whose

ek

2

Whose English Valours, on account of Fame, Are no less blaz'd then Greek or Roman Name. Their Grandeur weigh'd, and fuch admir'd Defigns, As give high Theams unto Heroick Lines: Had Homer them, or Mighty Maros's wit, Unto Times Future admiration writ; With every Fiction, as should intervene. For filling Glory to each weighty Scene. And had their Genius, like fome Sacred Merit. Left with Pernassus Legacies of Spirit To be Implor'd from thence, I well might now That Supplication to my Soul allow: As wondrous Actions here my Verse relates, And things Prodigious form'd 'gainst high Estates. No Civil War did e're so Impious sway, When Subjects durst their Sovereigns least obey. And tho' thy Reign First Charles fills no Record With spoils of Nations, or a Lawless Sword: The bad example of most Neighbour Kings, Whose stern Ambition unjust ruine brings:

Yet in the even Conduct of thy Mind Was Grandeur above Scepter unconfin'd. Not more difmay'd when unthought Storms appear'd, Then in best Calms whose change was causes fear'd. And to Celestial Councels only known, Why he, whose Virtue did adorn his Throne, Should so accomplish'd not successfull be Against the Wicked when his Enemy. Vile in their rife, and in that more Accurst Because proceeding from Peace loathed first By Graceless hearts, which were too proudly bred, And from their Peace and Riches Ranc'rous fed. Whence Faction's Itch did more envenom'd sprout Contagion spreading through the Vulgar Rout. And like quick Plagues, when mingling with their breath. The Crowd Infected e're they fear'd their death With these high Evils poysonous Libels joyn'd; Fame's Vulgar Magick, aptly then defign'd By men whose Subtleties could full delude, And to their ends engage the thoughtless Crows

And next, themselves did wholfome Patriots blaze. More to allure the Vulgar's Giddy praise. Divulging faults where none Just fault could find, Or call that Crime which they for Crime defign'd. Nor less Supine 'gainst Church then State durst rail, Whilst Scots help'd England with their Pious Tale : Or Covenant form'd that speciously might bring Both Nations to Oppose their Laws and King. How did their knotty evils then awake, The Just Repose our Monarch's Rule did take? Abroad he faw Peace blefs'd him every where, No Less Made Forraign Wonder then their Fear: Nor more, at Home, did Troubles apprehend, Who thought, his Good might others Evil mend. Whence Heavens permissive Will did him allow Much ready Justice with a Sword too flow. A Merit that on bad Men little gains, Whose fear, not love, their duty most retains. Now Pop'lar fury, with it hop'd for Swinge, Had fer Commotion on the fmoothest Hinge.

When Low'd defires brought Parliament Estates, To colour more three Kingdom's wretched Fates: In hope the Scepter without blow might fall, Or shar'd by Lords and Commons at their Call. No Negative Will their Sovereign they'd admit, All they would Act, nay kill as they thought fit. Thy bloud Great Strafford foremost must be Spilt, His Head their fear, and death no loss their Guilt. Whilft Poz'd the Senats Artifice to Maintain, That Law did Treason in his Case Explain. Whose fall his Princes Cares did much Augment, Who griev'd, yet grieving gave his wrong'd Confent. Flatter'd with hopes of future good from Men That were bad first but to be worse agen: And shows to Kings how dangerous they Comply, When they (with evil ) Subjects Gratify. Nor less the Multitudes unruly Fate, Who thought his Bloud more prosperous days should Not judging Heav'n had but deferr'd the time When they must bleed to expiate their Crime.

All which the Politique Houses had foreseen. When left to Crouds Seditions welcome Scene. (ftroak'd. Well knowing that such must for their Crimes be Before they could be more subservient yoak'd. Or Grants obtain'd, Be aiding unto more, That should confirm an everlasting Power To fit and Vote; To which their Prince Agrees, . Hoping to winn them with Benignities; And this High gift like which none e're had been By Subjects ask'd, or given by English King. Whilst they neglecting his too facile Grace, Give to their asking still a bolder Face. Refolv'd to Compass such Disloyall things, As should dethrone him with his line of Kings. No thoughts like these did complicate his Cares, And pierc'd him deeper in his Conforts Tears: Her Person Menac'd and defam'd by those Who most did high disorders then dispose. Which tho' 'gainst her Ingloriously apply'd, Yet no occasion she her Soul deny'd.

That to her King her Value could affure, Or tell the World what she'd for him endure. To whom, with Meen and Greatness duly Joyn'd, She briefly thus express'd her Glorious Mind. What Fate foe're in these Commotions lyes, Or fury staring in your Peoples Eyes; Should it shame Starrs that such presages guide, Or to your Rebell Subjects joyn their fide: No day, from aiding you, shall me deterr. How difmall e're may look the face of Warr. Too fure your friend, your Foes do me suspect, Since my Soul most your Cause must needs affect. Like which no Glory from my Life can fpring. Or Courage in the Wife of fuch a King. What Ally won't your Warrs concern embrace, Or Prince descending from a Royall Race, When I your praises shall to them declare, And how Compleat to Rule your Virtues are: Thefe, your best Standards, I'le abroad display, If through the Occean Starrs affift my way.

To these obligements of her Soul to him. Whose Virtue best their Merit could esteem; He thus replyes: If Heaven designes to me By Peace or Warr a due prosperity: The greatness of thy Mind and Love I'le own. Above Attempts that may support my Crown. My Kingdoms dangers threaten every where, As from black Clouds Men future Thunder Fear. Fierce Pop'lar rage above its Region swells, Whence few discern where most the mischief dwells: But more fevere that Crime unto my Heart, As your affliction has with mine its part. What Absence can you sever from my mind, Where like another Soul your value's join'd. Whilft I affifting of thy Just Retreat, Shew my Affection's no less kind then Great. Nor would I that true Annals should disperse My Acts of Glory, and not Thine rehearfe. His Queen in whose Heroick Soul did meet All things that Love and Majesty compleat:

Yields to depart, with fo Serene a Grace, That Grief seem'd vanquish'd in her Tender Face. Much kindness she express'd, and more forbears; Lest Words too fadly should produce her Tears: Or that her Soul to utter wanted power How kind she'd leave him in that dismal hour. Such Nobless as with Duty did attend Oa this Departure, how did they contend To fix Impressions on their Souls that might Admire the Grief and Grandeur of this fight? Nor Judg'd they forrow could enough Address, With tears their wives and daughters did Express.] As they fear'd evills from that hour would fpring, That destin'd was to part a Queen and King. Thus they Lamented; and next Joyntly pray, That Heaven might fafely guide on Seas her way. And from the Glory of her Voyage yield, Fair fam'd Assistance to her King in field. Winds foon their wishes take, whilst Neptun's face His Azur'd Curls and smoothest Billows grace:

Proud

Proud that his Swiftest waves her fraight must bear. Asher flout Ship to Belgick ports did fleer. Had former Poets this Atcheivment known. Not their verse Thetis Queen of Seas would own. Since Love and Glory more Sublimely raise A Confort to our Empire on the Seas. The Queen thus to a Forraign Coast retir'd. Where Highest Potentates her worth admired. And how she more then Woman's skill apply'd, That her Kings Cause might soonest be supply'd. When Belgian States ( fo long oblig'd had been To Fam'd Elizabeth our English Queen; By whom their Body-Politique did rife In spight of Spain then held so Great and Wise) She with Pathetick words did highly move, Wishing their Power as Gratefull as her Love. Since by a fad Vicissitude of Fate, The English Crown Courts their obliged State: Letting 'em know to what a Glorious end They may for ever be call'd Englands freind.

To which the Belgick State, with Supine pride, (Th' effect of Power and Riches) thus reply'd; What er's the Cause that this Address does bring, Thus Honour'd by the Queen to Brittains King. An Envoy, which our Greatness must confess, Does more then Humane Majesty express: Far be't that our now Mighty-States disown Their past Oblig'ments to the English Throne, By whose brave Aid's we did best force obtain On Land and Sea to Curb Aspiring Spain. And what is more, did next advantage take Our felves (of Subjects ) Mighty Lords to make. For which Spain Lowdly did us Rebells call. Who durst hope Safety by that Scepters fall. A bold Necessity which Subjects brings First to oppose, and then Dethrone their Kings. Whether the Brittish quarrell be the same. Or from a specious greivance would disclaim Like us their Monarch's Rule; in either Case We can't the English Crown's demand embrace.

Least held our States high Blemish to resist Our Prince at Home, and one abroad affift. We with most Kings a free Commerce Maintain: Whose coin may Ships, Arms, Men, from us obtain. No Princes Wanting Caufe our States espouse, To gain's our business when our Neighbours Loofe. The Queen by prudence and experience taught, Disdains to utter the Contempt she thought, These Courser States deserved, tho' well she knew How few Dominions are to others true. And what a Cold redress most Princes finde, When Fortune is to their affairs Unkinde. Yet with her felf concludes (tho? stript of all That could a Monarch's fuffering Spouse befall) Nothing to Mis-imploy that can affure Her King's great Safety, or his Ayd procure. Such Matchles Gemms whose Luster did adorn The Diadems which English Queens had worn; She, as her Glorious Offering did bring To purchase ayd, more Sacred, for her King.

No fooner Covetous Belgians these behold,
But they Comply (on fuch ) to lend their Gold;
Tho' adding to the Summ before deny'd,
So Sure are Mortalls by their profit try'd.
But oh the Fate of Princes that deplore
Their want of power as well as being poore.
Orange, who from Imperial Linage Came,
Had by Alliance no less mingled fame,
In feeing late wedded by his hopefull Son,
The eldest Princess of the Brittish Throne:
With Generous Greatness to the Queen thus speaks
Since my Bloud Glory from the Rule partakes
Of your Just King, 'twere mean should I deny
My Purse to ayd his Injur'd Majesty.
Wishing my Treasure could alone Compleat
Such Noble force as might his foes defeat.
And did not Age forbid, with fuch affairs
That here Imploy my person and my Cares,
I'de like a Soldier 'mongst his Bravest Fight,
And Honour'd if my death his Cause could right.
To vene defyance, to his Pallace be ought 110010414141

The Queen thus furnish'd by this Great Ally, To purchase Arms and Men she does apply Her foonest Care, Next Martialists confults; And then does ponder from their bold refults. How best to guide her Force, what Port to finde, Wishing her Love could wings add to the Winde. That foon returning with well-formed Power, She might her Charles affift some usefull hour. The Queen thus active in a Forraign State; My Muse shall by her Measures here relate, A further Progress of Intestine broils, And how our King prepared for Martial Toyls. Whose Rule, by Itubborn Evills then opprest, Tho'it so long Ingratefull Subjects blest: Who Kingly Grace and pardon durft neglect, The Balms which Publick Cures fo oft effect. Which Impious arrogance did then Improve In fuch, who their Prince would not fear, nor Love. And Notion'd thus th' Impetuons Crowd was taught To vent defyance, to his Pallace brought.

Whitehall

Whitehall his Sacred residence beset By Crowds, for Threats and Terrors there had met. No Humane Violence could with this Compare. But in Men-Monsters who deny'd to Fear The Heavenly Scepter Jove was thought to hold, When he Olimpus faw attaqu'd of old. The King, enough deploring, foon beheld Th' Inflam'd vulgar Fury unrepell'd By London Magistrates due advice or ayd. Where more then Law was Factions then obey'd! Who durft his Pallace wish despoyl'd by such That Royall Mansions thought for Kings too Much. The King less greiv'd from his Lov'd Court to move Then there to trust such Pledges of his Love, Whose Tender years could not his hast partake, Nor Left behind fecurely for his Sake. His Lands, Towns, Treasure, soon to be possest, By fuch as wish'd his Crown should be opprest. Whilst he retiring ( like that Trojan Prince, Who could no longer be his Troy's defence, Yet with high Courage Rescu'd there from Fate The Princely Heir of that declining State, ) Had many dangers pass'd that round him stood. When fav'd the Blooming Hero's of his Blood. His Prince of Wales and York's Duke young in years, Preferv'd from Foes by his Supremest Cares: And by their Fathers Suff'rings grew to know The Streights to Glory they must undergo. Who tho' he Kingdoms had, and Cities Great Whichow'd obsequiance to his Regal State, Yet in their vast Circumference knew not where Twas best to Influence first his Martial Sphere. Till too like Private Majesty remov'd, And Journeying far his Prudence had approv'd The North's * Metropolis, to which adjoyn'd Regions to Loyal Glory full Inclin'd. And being a Prince refolv'dly Great and Just, In Law supporting as his Scepters trust: Thought Heaven and he divinely were obey'd, When Subjects should his Cause most dauntless aid. * The City of York. Soon

Soon did the Nobles then themselves convey Unto their King, fcorning from him to flay, Or with time-ferving Disobedience stain Their part of Honour in his Glorious Reign. The Generous next their Brave Example take, Whilst soon, their worst remains, both Houses make: An Impious Body-Politique to fit, Where future Parliaments may blush to sit. Since from that Fatal late abused Name, A fpreading evil kindled first its flame. Unhappy Westminster so oft to be The Seat of Publique Good and Infamy. Our Second Edward and our Richard tell, How black, from them, thy Records there do dwell. And what adds more unto thy Monstrous Date. The Best of Kings there doom'd to wicked Fate. Which Deeds with their Prodigious Story may Unequall'd stand to the World's ending day, Nor could the Houses subtlest Gloss evade Reflections by the Wife were early made:

When Actions, how-e're worded, did imply,
They pointed at the fall of Monarchy.

Design'd by such, to Rule, would force their way,

Tho', Slave-like Fellow-Subjects them obey.

From which Ambition ( oft man's proner Curfe

When tempted by bold perils to be worse)

The face of War did gradually appear,

Foreseen by more then durst divulge their fear.

Seditious Scotland, that had first begun

To form Rebellion before Forty One,

And from their wicked Presidents had been

Slily instructed in this Impious Sin;

That where known Story most Allegeance blots,

Twill doubtless yield to History of Scots.

England they faw they could not then compell

To grant them Seats where they might warmer dwell.

For which our King they envy'd, tho' their own,

But most, because most Happy in our Crown.

Craft thus imploy'd that fubtly had inclos'd

Their labour'd Mischiefs, which they thus dispos'd

Their

I

Their Schism and Faction, unto England brought, Intrigu'd fo firm that with their Snares 'twas caught. Which to uphold both Houses joyn'd their Vote, That with Arm'd Scots their Arms they might promote. Rebellious Ireland, that could not stay 'Till Scotch and English Bloud was cast away, With headstrong guilt begins this wicked Time, Few apprehend which Nation's greatest Crime. The King his Person offers to oppose Against his Irish Rebells, yet not knows Which Kingdom would to him most safety yield, Or where best first for him to take the Field. England, his dearest Pledge, imploy'd his Grief, Whilst bleeding Ireland call'd for foon relief. Which left he should Conduct the Houses pray That he at home as unsecure might stay. Refolv'd their Pow'r his Arms should first oppose. More to encourage every where his Foes. Fearing lest he from Just occasion might Others fubdue, and next them ftronger fight.

No Sword by their Confents with him they'd Truft, Whose great Revenge they fear'd, yet knew 'twas Just. Effex, whose stubborn Will and fullen Pride Had with this Poplar Faction long comply'd, With greater Zeal Heads their Rebellious Caufe, Nor grants 'tis guilt to fight against the Laws. Who fway'd by specious Arts, and thirst of Fame, Difcern'd not then a Loathed General's Name. Forgetting whence Nobility did fpring, Or how 'tis stain'd when Arm'd against the King. Thus crowded into Power he Leads that Force, Which the bold Houses Vote their Foot and Horse. Numbers no Less then Mighty to Impower The evils which that Age did foon deplore. What was thy Crime, O London! then to be The Numerous Ayd of this Calamity: Was it because thou wert too richly great, Or too long pamper'd in a bleft Estate; That thy Ingratefull heads then feem'd to ake, And by pretended flame a Feaver take,

An Artifice to worst Delusions joyned, As Zeal transported had the Peoples Minde. 2000 11110 And if my Versea Prospect duly take love bive notive Of what did then fo fierce Transactions make, I mile al Truth foon declares that twas no publique Senfe That had diffus'd fo yild an Influence led as Walling of But heatfull Parties that within their Frames, For ends devis'd, had rais'd fuch horrid flames; And but the name of Parliament did feign, On purpose to convey a larger stain. And which no well-form'd fense allows to be That full Conventious Publique Infamy. A Constitution Great to all effects. As it our Good discerns and Bad detects? From whence the Nation best their Pulse perceives, And when tis found more foundness then receives. If Craz'd, or will not other help endure. That proy'd State-Phisick can compleat the Cure. And what, beyond all Treasures, Aid Imparts, It both receives and gives the Peoples Hearts.

An Envy'd Glory through which Nations fee Cause to repine our just felicity. When wild exorbitance of Pride and heat. In other Rules have their pernicious date. And more detects our Late Unhappy Times. In which Men boldly strove to heighten Crimes: Kindled by fuch on each fide did Convey. Their fiery Ends the most destructive way. By perverse Parliaments the Factions fought. That low and poor their Monarch might be brought: Denying, for their ends, their publick Aid, As first their Niggard purse him disobev'd. Which forc'd Prerogative, by Royal Right, To claim, for Common good, the Purfes Might: An Aidfull Power that Scepters must attend, Lest Subjects ill retain what Crowns should spend. Tho' Pop'lar Patriots did this Act difown. And cast afpersions on the Straiten'd Throne; As they 'gainst Shipmoney disgusts proclaim, With high Contests, which to Tribunals came;

That their Great Monarchs Rule might want fupply. Till Senats should less peevishly deny. When this fam'd King, whose Soul was full proper To give his Royal Claim no wrong defence. Confented to give Law it's due repute. That Legall Process might his Plea promote. Which Misconceived in a furious Time. When Jealousies and fears durst vent their Crimes. By deeming things undutiously amiss. That men might thence diffrust their Nations Blis? Ceased not their Rancour, tho' by * Act of State This Tax abolish'd was to Lasting Date, As they abetted a Difloyal fear Of Oblique Motions in the Royal Sphere: Whence Crowds were Taught more strictly to embrace. What then was call'd their Senat's fighting Case: Lest that subdu'd they might be next undone, And Lives and Fortunes grant by Conquest won.

* By Act of Parliament Ship-Money was dam'd, by which and other Gracious Condescensions the King endeavour'd to prevent the future Miseries of his Nation.

'A Sense devis'd by obloquies of Fame To blemish their King's Rule and Sacred Name Thus fome did with most horrid Arts devise How to Impose on all more Just and Wife. Such fubtle Members as the Houses sway'd, Soon their Delufions takingly convey'd: With what by Vulgar Fury cou'd promote The Cause which their fierce Patrons first did Vote. To which their violent Spiritual Guides comply'd, Who taught Rebellion then was Sanctify'd. Was't not enough that former Ages found, How fuch Incendiaries did then abound: That Pulpits must afresh divulge their flame, And, fread of Beacons, publick Broils proclaim: Provoking Heaven and Inauspicious Starrs To hafte the bloudy Aspects of our Warrs. When in their Orbs the rest began to fear Lest Mars, in spight of Jove, should domineer. Nor less the Azur'd Regions did presage Prodigious Fights and Battels in that Age

Arms, against Arms, to mens affrighted eyes,
Seem'd as array'd Battalions on the Skies;
Where flashings did like Guns discharging shew,
And Flames resembled Pikes in Skirmish too.
Most fear'd what these strange Visions should portend.
Or hop'd Heav'n might by them bad men amend.
Whilst nothing the sierce Houses then restrain'd,
Or that rough * Earl whose Conduct they had gain'd.
Not, as they did for Bloud and Treasure thirst.
Or wou'd for Horrid Spoils of War be Curst with More specious they seem Laws and King to treat,
So subtly Mortals would their guilt abate.

* Of Essex, who was the first General, and Head of this Grand Rebellion.

Wirhout perceiving the Impactions

. The man can install conclude Numbers fliew

When War a rough Phylick property and was fight

Till after War Twees beegdes it sann croin.

The SECOND BOOK.

The Argument.

Intestine Discords by what Method spread,
The Quartes the unhappy Title bears
Of King and Parliaments opposed Arms.
And like the body of the State confus'd,
The Members differ: Towns, Cities, Counties,
Miserably behold their Magistrates,
Tho Guardians of their Peace turn'd Enemies,
And arm'd in this destructive War appear.

AR thus prepared and boldest Summons sent Tincite more swiftly Minds to Fury bent,

Without perceiving the Impetuous Source

Of boundless Evils, which their Crimes did force.

Or that Peace feem'd their Universal pain,

'Till after War 'twere begg'd of Heaven again.

A Grifis oft gives Furious Tempers ease,

When War's rough Physick proves their worst disease.

What man can in most touching Numbers shew

The various Ills with that Time's License grew:

When

When neither tie by Bloud, or Parents Tears, ad and V/ Nor Conscience which man's Soul diviner fears : 100 A Could Son or Brothers daring heart deterr on Claud T From being ally'd more guilty by this Warr. Or not with headstrong fury soon oppose T bib bal The fide their dearest Friends for safety chose. The Nor did the Aged then forbear to show, it forestorne? That Peace was wither'd no less then their Brow : Conspiring in the Autumn of their Time, and to Illi To misguide others by their Graver Crime. Whence Evils with more Grandeur did augment. As Age taught Youth fo little to repent. And by their joint endeavours did affure, modely madW That this Wars fatal flame would long endure. The Forts and Castles that had slighted been. And by their Ruines told Wars Antient Sin; Laborious hands did Numerously repair; And with their Dusty Toils obscur'd the Air, Whilst distant Men affrighted did befold New forms of Terrour far furpassing old.

onW

When but Bows piercing Shafts from Bulwarks flew. And not so horridly as Guns Men flew. Thus fome Lamented, whilft the Many strove Their Nations fury highest to improve. And did Tumultuous Rage through Regions spread, With Thefts from Wars bold License sadly read. Some total Plunder'd and their Persons fent, Revillaby Crowds, to loath'd Imprisonment. Whilst others forc'd from Houses and Estates, Were left like Wanderers unto wretched Fates. Tho' Charg'd upon their Souls no other Crime Then not to Aid the Mischiefs of that time. When violent Men Delinquencies durst make In fuch as would not Peace with them for fake: Or hop'd that Moderate quiet might be had. When but to live fecure was counted bad, Number the People's Monfrer, like the Birth Of that vast Giant fam'd the Son of Earth; Its own unweild dwer did roughly bring his hardy To Aid Intended Arms against the King.

Who

Who tho' his Life and Crown he foon might Stake? Beheld his Leavies for his Cause too weak. Courage his Hope fustain'd, and Conscious Right: 1) Which to defend Best Kings renown'dly fight. But e're his Enemies did neer him joyn, Or Re-inforcements further their Defign; Their strongest Parties vigour he'd first try, And teach them from his Sword 'twas Just to fly? Whilst then his Power in Horse began to spread, And by most Gen rous Bloud of English Led ; Of whom he thought no praise enough cou'd be; Or Greatness joyn'd unto their Dignity, Untill Great Rupert, his Renown'd Ally, He made First Captain of their Cavalry. A Prince that did in his High Lineage joyn Best German Race with England's Royal Line. And what did most embellish his High Bloud, No less in Story fam'd for Brave then Good. Who for this Expedition duly chose Troops best approv'd to meet the hardy Foes. With Worcester

Worcester that had Allegeance early shown, When many Cities were disloyal known: (Tho' her distress from future Fate did bring A Second Charles to live an Exil'd King.) Implor'd of Heaven a foon Auspicious hour. As near her then took Field the Royal Power. To which Campagne the Houses eager Vote, That War, on their part, should its haste promote; Had fent their firmest Regiments of Horse, In hopes they'd there succeed by strenuous force. Sands had these Glittring Troops; resolv'd for Fame, Led to this Field with full Couragious Flame. His thought's with Number rais'd and boldest Pride, To be held early fignal by his Side. Not as he wou'd the Juster Cause maintain, But Glory fought mixt with pernicious Gain: Which profitable Encomium much did sway Men that the Houses serv'd for Praise and Pay? His Troups encounter'd, swift Resistance find; And next like Stubble scatter'd by the Wind With

With a Confused Haste their slight confound; Whilft with their gasping Friends Death strows the Their Resolute Chief whose Courage could not yield, Timely to grant his Foes the Conquer'd Field, Too deeply wounded is a Captive made; The Prince, with Courteous grief, his Cure affay'd By best skill'd Surgeons who his wounds explore. But found, too far past aid, his Vital Power. Nor did his Valour harden fo his end. As't did his Cause then Courage more commend. Great Rupert prosp'rous thus and fill'd with hope To gain by future Conquest further scope; Unto his Royal Unkle did retire With many Trophies of his Martial Fire. The King with Temperate Thoughts so poyz'dh That no events in him a Change could find: To his Brave Nephew, with Indulgent Grace, Did thus express; Tho' of my Princely Race, I gladly prove thy Valour fuch as may Preserve my Scepter in each doubtfull day,

Should

Should my Oppofers fiercely still adhere and still!
To stain their Crimes more deeply by this War!
Yet'tis my Royal Soul that bids confess, ale A dis IT
That I must welcome less, then they, Success
Tho' they fight to relist what I maintain,
Yet fill my Subjects are on both fides flain.
Wherefore to Lead my Battels that I may
When Victor shew more Mercy still then they.
As with Calm Glory thus the King exprest,
A Warlike heat enflam'd Great Rupert's breast
Who thus replies, Since your severest Foes
Cannot your steady Greatness discompose;
In nothing I'le be wanting to incite
Your boldest Troups with forward Zeal to fight.
Nor shal't be said that I one Peril shun
Where Service can for you by Arms be done. on thir
Unto your Powers Heaven daily does dispense and oT Aids undiscern'd by Humane Providence.
Your Royal Standard no where is display'd, 19 vibale I
But Welsh and English gladly are Array'd.
Who;

Who, when War's Discipline improves their Might, Will foon for you undaunted Soldiers fight. The King tho' in his Nephew thus beheld Example's Grandeur, which had oft upheld Daring Attempts by forward Captains Led Who Fortune's briskest Smiles had fometimes had: His Nobless, Gentry, to Atchievements prone, w That most Magnanimous might assist his Throne. Yet could not be allay fuch Anxious thought As his Affairs in prospect to him brought. His Forces newly rais'd and thinly Arm'd, And more the Sinews of their Hearts uncharm'd By Coins alluring force, his Treasure spent, Or greatest part, unto his detriment! By the bold Houses rigidly possest, And in that Nerve of State him first distress'd. Whilst, to his grief, his wanting Files might fay, That Duty set offalmost ali their Pay. All which did in their Grievances declare How deep the King concern'd and Nation were.

Throughout its Parts and Orders un-intire, And Notion'd as did least their Peace confpire. Some Vassals, with their Lords, themselves array, Others their Lords by fighting disobey. No State or Birth their due distinction find, Whilst mean and bad then joyn'd their worst design. The Swain his tilt neglected in despair Of what his Glebe might yield another year, Judging that Camps would better him fustain, Then his disorder'd toil for future Grain: No Aid whate're but did reception find; Wars Darling, Force, is best with Number joyn'd. Effex from London march'd with highest State, When throng'd Applauses did his Soul elate, By th'Houses management, and Crowds defign'd, To heighten Fervour in his Poplar Mind. Who with their Sanguine Zeal had less conspir'd, Had not Fame's Tinder to his Temper fir'd. By which Impulse, or from the Face of things, I will A That Rugged Souls to proder Violence brings sob well

He foon his Army full compleated Led Near to Campagnes in which the King's was spread. Not doubting but his Num'rous Warlike Force, So well accoutred by the Houses Purse, Would foon the King's best formed Powers defeat, When they should boldest his in Battel meet. And that his Caufe no finooth pretext fhould lofe, Which for its Vail the Senate's Votes had chofe. Unto the King a specious Errand sends, That to his Sovereign fafety recommends: By wishing he'd from Perils soon withdraw, Since no respect can flying Bullets awe: Or Swords promiscuously in Battels kill, And may, 'mongst Lower Bloud the Highest spill. So plaufible wou'd men their Figures take, If words, for their Offence, can Varnish make. The King, whose even Greatness did compose His Person to the wonder of his Foes, Thus to the Earl's delutive Message says; Tell the bold man who for Inglorious praise

Does near Imbattel'd to our fight appear; And dares by Arms to bid his Sovereign fear. That Phabus may as foon decline his Light. When Cloudy Meteors would obstruct his fight, As witness my Just Glory I disown, Or Deeds my Scepter highest can renown, Tho' with my Pers'nal Sufferings shou'd combine The worst that Armed Subjects shall design. The King here ends: And next Great Lindsey spake, Since Me, Great Sir, your General you make, Suffer that I unto this Earl commit What may my Honours Station well befit. He is a Captain and I'de have him know My Prowess shall him equall'd that way show. But if before the fury of this day, He'l fingly Combate me a Soldiers way. Our Persons shall our Battel's Signal be, As we begin to fight for Victory. This Errand thus return'd; Effex declin'd All other Fight then with his Army joyn'd.

Who judg'd that 'twas a much securer course To wave then meet Brave Lindsey's single force. The King from Edge-Hill's top, like Jove on high, When Mortals once 'gainst Heaven Incamp'd did lie Undannted faw the near Campagne disclose Power that durft him divine on Earth oppofe. And as a Royal Chief did next descend Strictly to view if orderly extend His Battel, Wings, of Infantry and Horse; Inspecting next if their Souls vig'rous force Stood on their Looks, and how each Perfons Face Spoke daring Conduct in his Martial place. 'Mongst these, as Valours Ornament, he saw Best Peers and Gentry Glistring Swords to draw. Not readier to Command then to Obey, Where Voluntiers they rank'd themselves that day. Mingled with these he more Intent beheld Some by him least oblig'd or favour'd hrld, T'inlarge his Royal Files did there refort, Without expected Gift or Place from Court.

Whilst others by his Royal Bounty rais'd To Honour, Wealth, ne're in their 'Scutcheons blaz'd; Ingratefully from his Just Cause withdrew, Or 'gainst him did worst Renegado's shew. Which frontless guilt when well the King compar'd With fuch, fall-Soul'd with Duty, him rever'd; Their Loyalty unpamper'd by his Gifts, Whilst Falshood had in others gainfull shifts. How might this Prince hope Heaven his Crown would Since Conscience thus for him won hearts to fight? When Factions did the Houses Votes maintain, Blended with various Interests and Gain. Some Bankrupt Commons and of Gentry Such Who fafe Estates and Lives would others grudge: And purposely Commotions did Create, To share Large Gleanings by their Nation's Fate: Which gave the King occasion to deplore, Where his Arms loft they lessen'd Virtues Store; And could but low retaliation find, If Bloud they vanquish'd mean or unrefin'd.

Effex, whose Talent was in words not great, Or like fuch Chiefs whose Oratory's heat The fervour of their Militants could raife, And by apt Speech and Conduct mingle praise: Yet Lest his Soul too heavy seem'd to fill 1986 His Organs, or unbent his Armed Will, He boldly own'd to Heaven, a specious way, His Lawless Cause as he presum'd to pray With Canting Teachers, who could Prayers device And Texts expound Rebellion to difguise: Befitting well the Factions of those Times, And men who fought and begg'd fuccess for Crimes. . Thus, to his Name's reproach, his Files he Led In Keinton-Field against his Nations Head: Where foon both Armies furiously Engage, That English might kill English on that Stage. When first from loudest Canons Bullets flew And Ranks of Men at remote distance slew. Some view'd their fever'd Limbs e're they could dye In parts by Deaths feverest Cruelty.

Others were flain outright by one huge blow. And happy whom fuch Guns had killed fo : Or were by stunning Shot bereav'd of breath. As Canons, without wound, enforc'd their death. Some Horse throw Riders wanting Limbs to tread. Others by Bullets torn in halfs lay dead. Thus with Man's Fate the fervile Beaft complies. And in Wars method most alike him dies. This Thund'ring Prologue ceas'd, the Scene did fill With thicker Mischiefs, tho' less Engines kill. Which Musket?s close opposing Peals convey, Numerous as Attoms when the burning day Provokes their intermingled globulous flight. And by their adverse motions seem to fight. Which Slaughter past another did ensue, That gives some death who had scap'd Powders blow. And did as difmal Prospects soon expose, As these fierce Legions closer fought their Foes. Foot against Foot their brandish'd Pikes imploy, And with bold Stands no less the Horse annoy.

Such foonest fall as would most daring live, and shorty In fo fhort time Fames Stage can Honour give. 10 of T But now as Fortune wou'd the King affift. Or teach his daring Foes less to refift : His Cavalry with furious drift had chas'd Th'Enemies Horse on their Right-Wing were plac'd Whilst vanquish'd through this spacious Field they fly. Nor thought to kop howe're by flight they dye. So strangely fear produc'd Ignoble haste. Tho' Fate they prov'd o'retook their Lives too fast. Great Rupert who the Royal Cavalry Led. And had too far purfu'd Brigades that fled, Remembred then the Friends he left behind, And how diffres'd perhaps he them should find. With whom the King might highest dangers share, Untill relieved by his Valiant Care. Thus he presag'd, and in his Mighty Mind, As much his boundless Valour then repin'd; That had furpass'd occasions Limits so, As Fortunes Time did from him backward go.

Whofe

Whose Minutes slipt she proudly does distain The felf-fame favours to bestow again. Whilst in that hasty hour the Thirst of Spoils Too foon had mingled with his Soldiers Toyls. Some seizing Baggage of the op'lent slain, When others vafter Booty strove to gain. Their Fatal Profit, as too early they Would have the Gleaning of the Field that day. Which by this Prince discern'd, with res'lute Brow And highest Indignation bids them throw To earth mean Pillage, and with boldest Might Return with him unbroken Ranks to fight. Being rally'd thus, like Billows on the Main That with more furious Tides revolve again, He forc'd his passage back through Armed Foes, And Horse and Man Impetucusly o'rethrows. His Soul Impatient to accomplish more Then he had left behind undone before. Yet could not his Attempts, though prais'd by Fame. Prevent the froward Caft of Fortunes Game;

When

When the Effections with great Valour fought, and angitw
And the King's Battel unto hardship brought.
Whose Valiant Infantry tho' o'repowr'd with force
At once Encountred then both Foot and Horfe.
Whence many various fad effects enfu'd, habiteld
As here Death had her Tragick Scene pursu'd.
The hardy Pikemen that sometime withstood was alie
The strenuous Charge of Horse with loss of Bloyd : oT
'Mongst Broken Foot, defended least by flight,
In much disorder was enforc'd to fight. To it enaily
Their Front compell'd to mingle with the Rearc, in W
And many kill'd confus'dly fighting there.
Some trod to death by Horse in furious hast, and his Others by Cruel Leifure fell more fast.
Too many can't relift; relift wou'd fain,
So much their Valour of their Fate did gain.
Such Gen'rous Chiefs as could no longer guide
Their bravest Conduct gainst the prevailing fide,
With their distressed Militants now yield
To fall the Glory of this Bloudy Field.
Where

Where Fortune dreadfull revolutions wrought. As if the Destinies her Aid had fought. When Valiant Bands, which like a Sacred fence Had stood the Royal Standards stout defence. Diforder'd were, yet then difdain'd to fly; Or cease to fight, but as they'd fighting die. Belford who res'lutely his Squadrons Led To force their room by laying Files first dead, With Steps well dy'd in Bloud a passage made Where the King's Standard's Glory was display'd. Which matchiefs Trophy he aim'd to furprize As his bold Present to the Houses eyes. Whilft Loyal * Varney, who with Valiant Trust That highest Ensign's safety hop'd to boast; As he with fignal Prowess sometime stood Unconquer'd tho? expending Streams of Bloud, And as Life had thus bravely from him fled, The Standard fast supported held when dead.

* Sir Edmund Varney, Standard-Bearer to King Charles the

But this Knight's fall, tho' in defert alone Enough to fave that Emblem of the Throne, Could not without conjoyn'd Atchievments bring Sufficient rescue to their a Figur'd King. Which Glory valiant b Smith with others gain'd, And to retire the Enemy constrain'd. A Prowess with their Fame must still survive, Whilft deeds in Keinton-field with Story live. What Epithites in Verse can aptly raise, Trophees, that may perpetuate their praise. Or History that gives Truth such a Test, As Famous deeds are thence recorded beft. Too Numerous for my Measures to preserve, Or what my Muse may doubt she can't deserve. The day just spent (and well it happen'd fo When both fides ftill to fight refolv'd did show) As if Heav'ns Conduct auxiously took care, How Men against their wills should Mankind spare.

Linger

The King being Represented in his Standard with his Sword

Brave Lindy ( after mode list is ner) Chima and nice

And thus Night lever'd both these mighty Powers. So fiercely was Imploy'd that days fad hours. Night in which Terrors most accost man's thought. And shapes bad deeds in worser forms then wrought; What apprehensions might her hour's instill. On fuch, whose latest Guilt had been to kill. Nor did the fling day to them appear, ... Less dismall to their Conscious Crimes or fear. The Sun beheld far more then usuall red, If not his bluff when view'd the blood here shed. As fometimes Heaven does prodigies befrow, To Frighten Mortalls for Misdeeds below. And might then op'rate whilst with like decree, Both Armies quit the Field, yet neither flee. Effex to Warnick does his Forces guide, Enough exulting that his Stubborn fide The King's had fought, and unsuppres'd cou'd own. Such spoils of Dead and Living his were known. And what Fate most peculiarly did prize. Brave Lindsey (after made his Pris'ner) dyes a mini

Lindsey, whose great Example valour taught, In perills bold, yet these not heedless fought; A Captain aptly in a Hero Joyn'd, As if for Honours Master-piece design'd. And in that days fierce Harrass like a Chief Of Infantry, On Foot led Foot's relief; Till overpower'd, and weaken'd much by wound, His foes him feiz'd, near dead upon the ground. Compleated thus his Memory does Claim A lasting mention from the Tongue of Fame. The King his Camp to Oxford next remov'd, Where his Commands were full obey'd and lov'd. As Arts to Empire must obsequions be, And Measure thence their best Felicity. The Court and Camp no sooner settl'd here, But fresh Emergencies of War appear. London, on which the King did most reflect, As a wide fource whence flow'd the fighting Sect That for the Houses hercest did oppose: To check which heat he this this featin chuse. Belides The

Besides he judg'd that in that Mighty Town Were many Subjects highly did difown The Interest, which the Factious manag'd there, And might abate if his Force nearer were. But London's Temper would not then Endure To cease Rebellion by his force or Cure. T'approach that Town to Branford he arrives, Where Silver Thames its usefull Current guides: And like Vicifitude in Humane things, An Intercourse of Ebb and Flowing brings. But here he finds his March obstructed fo, That he must fight or else not forward go. The Streets and Avennues with Men befet, Who here (furviving Keinton-field) had met; And with like refolution durft defy, The force Conducted by arm'd Majesty. Hollis's Regiment being first at hand, Was led to combate by his bold Command. Soon were the Streets with gashly slaughters fill'd: Some Houses Ransack'd, and their owners kill'd; or

The

The Town obscur'd from fight by smoak and fire As if with Lives defigned to expire. The Kings frout foot that wou'd not yield to be. Repuls'd by dangers worst Extremity: Had the opposing Infantry Compell'd, To quit the Post which they so dauntless held. And full of Resolution did proceed, To give their Vigorous force more Gallant speed. Untill observ'd that London Powers were brought, To aid the Squadrons that already fought. Then which; Not Mighty Seaven-hill'd Rome had Legions more splendid Arm'd, and expert known; Tho' their unhappy Guilt that bloudy time. To be Defenders of their Senat's Crime. These Essex heads in hopes next to repair, His Parties loss, so much the Zealous care Of many fmart and Comely City Dames. Who to his Strenuous Caufe apply'd their Flames: And might his Manhood elfe not much regard, As doubting he too long liv'd Nature's Ward. NOT

The

The King who did in this Conjuncture know Timely the Reinforcements of the Foe, Consults such Chiefs in Conduct most excell'd. And round his Person no less great beheld; Then famous Hero's did of old appear, When Arm'd in Field's they King's Advisers were. And as Fame does suchhigh concernments blaze, Her Warlike records must these Worthies praise: Who did their subtle Enemies defeat. And in despite of more as bold retreat. Whilst with nine Enfigns won, and other Spoyls, The Royal Army then renown'd their Toyles. Tho' Kings by Martiall Glory least obtain, When by their Subjects loss they Trophies gain. Or fo inforc'd to Vindicate their Right, As their just Arms must their delinquents fight. Who as their Swords in battell Princes dare, From dread of Justice Mercy next despair. Nor Law Infring'd more Resolute defy, Then Conscience, the Soul's inward Majesty.

Now had the Sun his Autumn Glory spent, When longer hours of Cold to Night were lent. And fields did in their fading Green appear, The Change of Livery Nature gives the year. Which feafon not admitting longer stay, Abroad for Arm'd, both fides withdrew their way. So Bees in Clusters from fierce Battles Come, By cold enforc'd unto their waxen Home: Untill refresh'd by ease and warmer Air, Their bufy files to fight again prepare. Effex near London does his Quarters spread, Where by the Houses Votes they're warmly fed. And nothing's wanted might his loss Recruit, At Keinton-Field, or Branfora's later Rout. Yet Neither Boasted strength, or joys best Guise, Could tears repell from the Lamenting Eyes That griev'd for dear Relations wanted were, As in Death's Muster read their Numbers are. Tho' Pop'lar Conducts fuch Accompts most hide, Left People thence their dangers less abide.

Or from the fum of Lives profusely loft, Perceive how dear fuch aid themselves must Cost. The Royall force to Oxford next return'd, Where Joy's were high and some disasters mourn'd. As with Auspitious deeds of Warr appear. Bays that must needs some sanguine Tincture bear. Whilst here the Court, that had with spendour fix'd, Shin'd as with fading Glories Intermix'd. Where Noble Matrons fear'd what Threads of Life Fate wou'd allow their Conforts in this Strife. No less did Beauties (fain would Love espouse) Dread in their Lovers more then Life to loofe. Which high Afflictions Civil War does find To throw on best repose of Humane Kind. Yet now as Fame her Festival wou'd raise. For Celebration unto future days: Her Record swift she sends on Rum'rous Wing, As her high Present to be given the King: By which from his Illustrious Queen was known Her Person safe, and soon would meet his own;

Tho' Neptune more her Greatness to display,

Allow'd his boldeft Seas t'opose her way.

Which did the far admiring world inform;

How she, Our Heroine, vanquish'd Waves and Storm.

Great Maro fo did Fam'd Eneas blaze,

His Glory heighten'd on the highest Seas.

The King whose Love was fervent to his Queen,

By whom he, to her Fame, oblig'd had been,

As fhe his Cause did to her peril aid:

To meet her Person no delay he made.

Attended by the Eminent of his Court,

Fully compleated in their Noblest fort.

Beside applauded Beauties that did wait

On this fo high Concern of Love and State.

That Poets thence may future Copies take,

When they'd Diana's Chorus brightest speak.

Next unto these their Hero's did attend,

Whom Fame for Warlike Deeds could best commend.

Edge-Hill, fo near to Keinton-Field adjoyn'd,

Was then the Sphere where all these Lustres shin'd.

E

Tho

Tho' Mortals that would bad Prefages make From accidental Causes or Mistake, Might wonder that this Scene should here display, Where Time must still Inroll a Bloudy day: As if that Heaven by Circumstantial things Foretold Difasters, which the Future brings. The Queen whose Meen and Looks was Great beheld, And in her Persons figure too excell'd. More Comely did to distant eyes appear Then fullest Moon when shining in her Sphere. As here the King his Confort did behold, High Wonder did a while his words withhold. To shew her then Attractions pierc'd him more Then all the Darts that she had beam'd before : Which high furprise did on his Soul impose A Sense, above what Speech could foon disclose: Untill his Thoughts found strength enough to tell How far she did Supreamest praise excell And to what Peril she her Life resigned, To be more Great to his Affistance joyn'd.

To which the Queen with humble Greatness faid; What Earthly Glory higher is obey'd, Or Power of Love, if lasting Time thence know That I your Virtue no less lov'd then you. A Greatness which my Life too cheap had cost, If I had for your fake in Storms been loft. When late th'affaulting Billows of the Main Oppos'd my fafe return to you again. And Winds fo highly Combated in Course, As if to Seas in Skies my Wreck they'd force. Tho' Love then gave me fuch Heroick power, That most your Loss in Me, I fear'd that hour: Till Heaven whose Scepter Boundless Flouds obey, Through their deep dangers me did fafe convey : With Valiant Numbers fresh esteem have won In diffant Climes; may that be far outdone As they your Aid and Safety do affift, How stubborn e're your Foes shall dare refist. And should these not Success for you obtain, Worfe Seas I'de venture more Recruits to gain.

Tho! Merit feems too narrow for my Breaft, Who in your Love am more intirely bleft. And if Kings Beds throughout the World were feen, Yours wou'd contain the most obliged Queen. What Admirations might this Dialogue bring, war DA Or defert heighten in this Queen and King. Whilst throngs in Counties did applauding wait nonly/ On their Great Persons, 'till with Royal State Mageo At Famous Oxford Gloriously arriv'd; And which of Cities stands most beautify'd By Stately Colledges, and Learning known, And then the Center of the Camp and Throne. When for the welcome of the King and Queen, This City was more great and splendid seen, Then former time could her renown declare, Or highest Orbe of Science in her Sphere. And as fhe then did Celebrate her Joys, A The Camp its mighty Engines too imploys; Will wall Which as they figure best loud Tongues of Fame, To Regions far applauses did proclaim.

And

And next best Trumpets, ( Like to fuch of old in bank By Mars held Sacred when their Charms more bold The Arm'd Inflam'd, or for the Conquer'd Field, wo'l Their loudest Musick did to Triumphs yield ) 25 ni 10 Had ears remote delighted with their found, it some aA And Ecchoes that no voice before had found iria? adT And what did eyes as far remov'd imploy and hib now T'Admire the Skill was here and figns of Joy: 1010 of T The Famous Engineer had made by Artin W VIOH OIT Bodies that acted beyond Natures part: White all sell When Fireworks did in vary'd Forms arise; Some like to Meteors blazing in the Skies: Others like fiery Bullets feem'd to fly, and had the Or shot Granadoes Leaguer'd Towns do ply. Which being past, the men whose active Might In Running, Wraftling, Shooting, took delight: Or durft by hardy Arms for Prizes play In Imitation of Romes Ancient way; Had places proper unto them assign'd. Where Chiefs and Hero's as Spectators Joyn'd.

and what fubliment does mans thought extend. The Learn'd as Emulators did contend How their Address they should profoundest make; Or in as many Tongues refin'dly speak As once th'Apostles dit, tho' Scriptures tell The Spirit on them for that purpose fell. Nor did the Eloquence of Schools outdo The Gloss which Preachers did on praise bestow. Tho' Holy Writ no Person did convey That like this King to well could Love and Pray. As full his Confort's Soul they had Admir'd, If for Rome's fake they had been then Inspir'd. Next these some Poets gladly did dispense, In this high Juncture, their fublimest Sense. With what might most their Sovereigns Fame commend Whose Merit long on Feet of Verse should stand. Tho' of all Science, leaft the Mules date de de leaft the Concessions that, from Court, their value rate, Island of In which high Orb few Gawdy things admit and the Their smallest deference unto better Wit.

A vain neglect most Pens dare boldly slight, That can of Courts and Men refin'dly write. Which Glory then the Muses chiefly fought, As that Kings Stile our Tongue had fmoothness taught. Whose Book so matchless does his figure raise, As his Soul perfects there Immortal praise; And 'gainft his Foes fuch Eloquence does ipread, That they will ever thence be conquer'd read. Well might Wife Poets him to Fame commend, Whose Wit and Virtue Divine Glory blend. These Cefebrations past, the King and Queen No less Conspicuous in their Courts were seen. Where buly Joys and Whilpers fill'd the Ear: If Joy, could Joy be call'd and War fo near; Whose hours so roughly to their Periods flow, That Heaven does them by Angry Stars foreshow.

the molt excell a

The THIRD BOOK.

Glory then the

ook fo mate

The Argument.

The Wretched State of England in the Year.

Of Forty Three, the Poet's Pencill draws.

The King abus'd by falle Intelligence,

(The Corrupt Minions oft Intriguing Art)

The Authors Numbers in a borrow'd Name

Full represent, with Dornland's figure shown,

And for his Loyall praise, by Power of Verse,

To after Story rais'd, with how occurr'd

The Councills, Stratagems, and deeds of Arms.

The year recover'd had it's usuall Spring,

When blooming hours Warrs fatall growth did

And Ecchoes did with Tim'rous Voice resound

The dreadfull noise of Armed Troups around:

As by them spacious Randevouz were fill'd,

Warrs Schools, where Men in killing most excell'd;

Yet would th'effect of discipline that deem,

That War might have from wicked Art Esteem.

Effex who had some time at London spent. Enough regretted, as the Houses Meant. His March by all their vigorous Votes to haft, That he no time of Action then should wast. Or, from deliberate thought, dispose his mind, Less Violent then their rigid Votes design'd. Which he their Armies Head might fo diffuse, As in that Body Nerves might vigour loofe. The danger most they Fear'd by his delay, And next him to confirm the smoothest way: Their Pop'lar Charms, which most his foul did fit, They, Syren-like, had Modell'd by their Wit. For which Address a Person they select: Who thus begins, If our Votes can effect Praises sufficient to compleat your worth, Or deeds to come by Valour you'le bring forth: Know Great and Honoured Earl, the Houses will, By due Obsequiousness admire you still. Nor shall they your applause less valu'd deem, Then worthy of the Height of their efteem.

Tho' Envy mourn, or talk her felf then dumb? To fee our Crowds to you with Laurel come. You, more then Chief, did first espouse our Cause, When Threatn'd by our displeas'd King and Laws. Your Father did to Pop'lar deeds add Grace. Tho' Term'd by some the headstrong of his Race. Which Obloquy, or Court design might blaze, When dreading most the Compass of his praise. Contemn all Motives wou'd your conduct ftay, The Peoples heat oft Cools by small delay. The Earl who little did applaud the Sense Of foothing words, the drefs of Eloquence: Or had for quick reply no ready brain; Little return'd unto this speech again. Like one, that wou'd be understood to be Their Creature by his prone Credulity. And next unto his Army did repair, Where mouts like fuddein winds flew through the Air. From which applauses, and a soul well fill'd With such designs the Houses had instill'd,

Boldly

Boldly refolv'd, he do's towards Redding guide o but His Armies March; a Town the Royall side Had ftrengthen'd well, and Conduct duely plac'd, That had with famous trust in War been grac'd. Redding a Borough of a large extent, Yet greater far in the Emolument. Commodious Thames do's plenteoufly convey, And opulent Freights from London frem their way. Besides a Pass, that might no less withstand A far Commerce with England's East by Land. Which prejudice the Houses hop'd to Cease, By foon Compelling by their Power that place. But e're this Town's vast Danger we rehearse, Some things at Oxford first require our Verse. Which for their strangeness darkly Story'd are, Or left for heedfull Poets to declare; Whose thoughts do Records most remote sublime, And perfect Deeds unfinish'd left by Time. Poets are Authors, when they Actions tell, That suit with Truth, or it resemble well. on C

And even the real Deeds I here purfue, Seem no less strange, then if allow'd untrue. Which did so vild from these Commotions spring. That all their Changes did ftill worfer bring. The King perplex'd, how things might further tend, ( As Mediums bad with like effects do end ) His Subjects ruin'd by a wretched War; Some near him spoil'd, whilst some from Countrys far Quit their Aboads, whence they were forc'd to fly As Objects of their Nations Mifery. The Gen'rous Born of their Estates bereft, And unto Want and Wars wild Ruines left : Who thus despoil'd by men of Vulgar Race, That strove to levell all above their place. Was forc'd by Arms to vindicate their Right. And to their loss the Low of Mankind fight. Whilsthone by fuff'ring more renown'd was known Then Valiant * Dornland, In whose figure shown

*A Name here us'd by Poetical License to describe in his Character the Sufferings of many Eminent Persons in behalf of the Crown.

The Muses Pencil Story may direct, and only this man How there his Fame best Copy'd should be Left. Who having dangers Past, and sharp distress. His worthy Life, and duty did address. And had affairs of that Importance brought, As did require his Soveraigns Ear and Thought. Land And witness'd that his future deeds shou'd be No Less renown'd for dauntless Loyalty. Whilst from delays, and slights of Court he found Some (Tho' too near the King ) in heart unfound. Who cou'd with flattering Mene their Courtships pay For Treacherous ends, and Gain, the fubtlest way. Whence too Indulgent Princes often find Their Favours with their Fate too nearly lovn'd. This Generous fufferer full perplex'd that he Could not yet meet fit Opportunity, had a mill of T By which he to his Soveraign might convey Things that he found himself might safest say. At Last * Sydesmond passing by him faw, To him he steps, and faid, ere you withdraw ל ויסטי נווסט ליוו

A borrow'd Denomination to avoid what otherwise in his Character might reflect on the Hoffour of any known Name or Family.

Acquaint the King, his Loyall Subject here
Waits to Impart what's fit for him to hear.

Sydefmond with a Glaring Parafits Look
Surveying first the Man, to him thus spoke.

Alas! mean friend, for thou in Cloaths seem'st poor,
And for thy wants perhaps woud'st Coin Implore.

Could'st thou no better furnish'd now appear;
And hope, for Cause of thine the Courtiers ear.

We favoure do to Sprucer Men convey,
And who no Less us quaintly give then pray.

Perhaps thy person Merit wou'd Import,
Merit, a Drugg that slowly vents at Court.

The King's Cause glorys in their Sufferings most

How many kind words he to thee does owe.

And how thou dar'st thy person too expose

With any Mony-Less against his soes.

When if well maim'd perhaps I'le thee Commend

Wh' are Poor and Loyall at their proper Cost.

Unto fome Hospitall thy days to end.

Acquaint

Aboads, I grant, few varnished Shrines Bestow That half-Lim'd Hero's with their exployts flow. Things which brave Souls will never there repine, That can their reliques to their Crutch confine. Excuse my hast, I must on Men attend, and bank allA Can frankly Give, or will their money lend." name and All ways are welcome Treasure may disburse To wanting Courts, or fuch as guide their Purse. Thy Name I should have ask'd, or let it be 1) Would have (With thy Address) hereafter known to Me. Dornland's the Name (false Minion) I do own, And wish you to your Prince, so just were known. Whose Royal Cause I never did despair, Or felt in Soul one mean relenting Care, When other Loyalties did make their Halt, 100 ho ball Lest Ruine, like to mine, should them Assault. Via Vola All this I quit and gladly offer more minus I their Favorine and gladly offer more minus I their Then what my fingle Merit could explore. right fled well Things, that your ready favour might endear, Tho' you move near ele to your sover eights car. 5nA Perhaps

Perhaps a Story aptly may unfold and annual I The means of gaining Loyal Friends and Gold. At which Sydesmond hifts his wayward look, And with a feign'd Embrace to him thus spoke. Alas kind Gentleman! how foon amifs May man judge man in fuch a world as this ? Tho' not unlike to thee one t'other day No less glad Tidings did by me convey. And know, (if thou hast Courts but slightly read) That even Best Kings are oft by profit led. Papers I guess thou hast, and would'st present; Enough, the King shall foon know thy Intent. The Noble Dornland thus being left alone; Imploy'd his Leifure aptly to bemoan The fad effects, which Minions might prepare, As they give Pass-ports to the Royal ear: And by their Fawning Avarice design the state of the How best their Int?rests may their Purses line. A Paper reades, which next his Breaft he wore, Some well known Poet written had before on the form

And did black guilt of Parafits describe, gninist tal T And how to Pride and Sin ally a their Tribe. Which his Emphatick Verse does thus relate? of off T Tis told (lays he ) ere Lucife by Fattelda yas salT Was cast from Stars, or Heav'n did him fittend Of all Infernal Powers Tupremelt Fiend. In Il ont mora A Daughter then was his of Mighty Fame, Dan bal Call'd Sycophanea, If none her Misname. In U and nod T Sprung from his Beams, what cou'd Serener look, That Stars, some tell, with her smooth Court were A Tongue so Glibb might Tongue of Fame supplant, And for worff deeds, no Glozing words did want. Composed thus, and Garnish'd with a Dress, No Painter cou'd by Drapery express, Or like to what Aurora best does wear, When welcom'd Phabus to his early Sphere. Which Flattering Beauty, being thus adorn'd ( As if for Sins allurement then Suborn'd) With foothing Gestures to her Haughty Sire Did thus address: Since Jove and Fate Conspire

That

That shining Seats no longer now must be
The Wide Extent of your Sovereignty. To well bak
Tho' to Coleffial Records 'twas unknown and and abid V
That any Sublime Power cou'd Star dethrone lies
But grant that Heavens decree does you remove a 25 W
From the Illustrious Sphere is yours above to the 30
And next Command that Lower you descend double A.
Then the Unfathom'd Sea, or Earth extend : 5 1 5
Where you o're Churlish Fiends, and Chost must Reign
Pie win even them t'obey without their Chain and tadl'
And if your Rule repute would varnished raise of A
And for wife deeds, no clozing words did want
Me I am fure you will not leave behind, uds bologrio
So well my Arts may to your Throng be joyn'd ov.
This Court address'd unto her Stately Sire was sail 10
When welcom'd spire to his carly Sphere.
Which Flace this Beauty, being thus adorn did of Hard 'twere smooth Daughter, if to you deny'd it is A)
What Greatness by my Scepter may be given and drive
Tho' that must fall beneath my Orb in Heaven; bid
Where

Where next my shining Pomp I joy'd to fee The taking Meen and Gestures form'd by thee. Victorial A Greatness Angry Jove to me denies, Canorina al F Lest even in Hell thy Quaint Hypocrifies I line and I Should those quick Spirits heighten to be work Then does confift with Heavens precedent Curfe. Tho' for thy Glory Highest Powers do grant, That thou no Greatness shalt below e're want. Courts there thou't find most gladly thee will own. And make their Arts, in thine more taking known. And should none Earth their Paradise now call, Thou't least, of any there, repine thy fall. This faid, he downward fell with confus'd haft, No Thought did ever Time for prize fo falt. Tho' fome suppose that 'twas no more then when A Star does feem to fall to fight of Men. His Daughter left, his Counsel she obeys, And swiftly unto Earth her felf conveys. Kingdoms and States were foon made her abode (So pronely Sin finds out the Largest Road.)

Where more her Artfull Flatteries to disperse, She leaves her Fame to future Profe, and Verse. The Gen'rous Dornland having ponder'd well The usefull Sense, which wifer Poets tell, When they by choicest Allegories teach How man's best Morals Vileness shou'd Impeach. Commits this Poet's Verse to further thought, With what Instructions might from it be fought. Griev'd, that he did fo long his Sovereign wait, E're told what did import his Royal State. Which apprehension soon did lessen here, As he beheld the King in Person near. Whom by his Speech he humbly thus does move: Since you, Just Prince, oblige no less the Love Ot Loyal Minds, then what their Souls shou'd dare, When utmost Perils wou'd impress their fear, the rest Howe're's the plight in which I'me now beheld; if all From Friends, Lands, Houses, Impiously compell'd. My Life unto a Croel end Defign'd applied bas monografied By that strong Rage against your Powers combin'd, Which

Which Fury, the it late did me furround; q or swoH When Guards and Scouts were my Purfuers found W Whom as I flew through uncouth Tracts and Woods And fwimming (more then weary) dangerous Florids; ? Some Star's compassion medid hither guide il conic To ferve your Cause, and to express besides and flostA Things which my Duty would to you impart, w hin W And full affure the Conduct of my Heart 1 moy of start T. The King took thought a while e're he reply'd, I salA (Sydefmond having whisper?d him aside) blood as should y! And next to Dornland turning, thus did fpeak live buA What-e're's the Figure thou woud'ft feem to make saiW Think not that 'tis unto thy King unknown some moy How vilely men for ends have fallhoods flowon. and 10 And have fometimes deceived our Royal Ear, add ebasig As one can witness that attends Us here. has a commend in Proof I expect of what thou wouldst express, And if thy Flight's from London as I guess. Supplies from thence I fecretly expect: Twas told thy Errand might the like effect.

Howe're

Howe're proceed, that I may furely know Whether thy Merit be mistook or no. The Souls of Kings (next Heaven) there's nothing can So high oblige as well-deferving Man. Since, Mighty Sir, you do admit that I Attest before you my Integrity. Which (without Blush ) I wish as much to some That to your favour's hold the nearest roome. Alas, I fear you are too far betray? dan aloos and all By fuch as should your Royall Councells avd And with fincerest Faith preserve untold 1 17201 What Souls concuptly guided fell for Gold: 2010-101 Your Secret Councells by the foothings found Of Men unto your fafety most abusondness yelly well Friends thus deterred would effe profusely show vad bal Their Coyn and Persons offered sunto you? w no enowh With what forer your Cause neight best supply and and If fighting fo, they unbetrayed may dye. Nor shall Lights Orbone days bright Measure runi

Till in that revolution deeds be known. You blot asw I

That most perniciously themselves difplayed them be A And fhew what Serpents move too near your way 1011 Towards Redding, now does March a mighty force, I faw Roads thickly fill'd with Foot and Horfe how oc Whence Clouds of Duft fo strove to darken fight our As if they next would fmother ayr and Light. A did !! Effex their Cheif among the them too I faw, His Looks confus'd, as if some thoughtfall awe Hung on his Soul, or that he did devise organ dodw How he might foon that eminent Town Surprize. Which Left my Soveraign, should not timely know, What I have pass'd, I willing undergo: Nor shall your Cause Assistance want from me. What ere's my Cross or Future desting. More he had faid, but that fome fuddain thought Too deeply on his Soul Impression wrought; Of what had been predicted for his Fate, And might too nearly to his King's relate. Which Gracious Prince did Dornland further Grace. Beholding Strictly his firm Mene and Face.

And next thus fpeaks, excuse thou didst not find More quick remembrance from our Royall Mind. Tho' better then by fight th'art known to Me, So well thy Merit, and thy Fame agree. Thou didst before, Intelligence Convey, Which gives thy story Credit too this day. Releif for Redding I'le command in time, Tho' fome in Trust, cannot discharge their Crime; Who by Improper Correspondence fail, Or wou'd by faithless ends themselves avail. From which this usefull observation springs; Few, Earth affords, Heaven duely ferve, or Kings. Sydefmond, let it be thy Task to shew, By what we give how more to him we owe. The King withdraws, whilft falle Sydesmond flays; His eyes fresh Garnish'd by their fawning rays, Like Glozing Parasits, some Courts have known, When to their Princes Smiles they faign their own. Dornland discover'd had this Minion well, (Whose Mene did partly what he Look'd for tell )

Next lets him know, fince 'tis his Thriving way noo? To hold it meet Men should for favours pay: He'l fomething add to what he can expect. If but one Just Obligement he'l effect: 10 deliced VI Which was, that if his Covetous Soul could be will Induc'd to value Future Honesty, And that his Royall Mafter's Caufe sustain No Mischeif from his Tongue, and Impious Gain: The Gift the King to Dornland lately gave, He now ( to bribe thee honest ) bids thee have. Which faid, this Generous fufferer next departs; Enough observ'd by him some Courtly Arts: With what neglects endur'd and cold delay, Mens expectations their attendance pay: Whilst busy rumour soon his Name had spread, And how endanger'd he from London fled, Escaping perills of a various Form, I called the Deall Like some stout ship that boldly stemms a Storm. Besides the fast assurance he did bring omil gallimnog Of being a brave Affiftant to his King: aveil yland ac

Soon

Winich

Soon won the Most Heroick in those days. To ferve his person and advance his praise. Who next unto the Royall Camp repair'd, Where high Careffes foon his worth declared; In which bold Station my Pen leaves him now, Till future deeds his value ampler show. This Age fo ftrange a Curtain did undraw, And Scenes, of various wonders, thence had faw. That Hoary Time might (Novice-like) behold Such new Amazements as furpafs'd the old. And must (his future perspective disclos'd) Confess ensuing hours for ever pos'd. Whence this-Wars Story finds too narrow room For deeds that did fo thick together come. Tho' wife Historians with less Care relate The fmall occurrences and Arts of Fate: Then Councills, Battells, and such mighty things Which Fame applauds in Hero's and in Kings: Permitting Time some lesser deeds to vail. Or cheaply leave 'em to their own Entail, and a gold 10

Which method, if my Lines can here purfue; ages al Selecting facts, and things as likely True: With fuch besides, that Nature wou'd present, (Whose gloss on Story to the Muse is lent) Enough Parnassus is Implor'd by me, Or Time allow'd Supremest dignity. Tho' nothing can effectually deplore most of mindre A) What did enfue on this Wars Fatall Score: No wicked age before fo dear did cost That Bloud and Treasure had profusely loft. And what if well Imploy'd, had Conquer'd more Then all Great England own'd in France before; And forc'd the bold offensive French to be Confin'd unto their Just Capacity; Whilst now their prosperous Arms so daring spread. As France appears a univerfall dread. How many Countries feiz'd and more in Claim By fuch dependencies, he's pleas'd to name. As if the World he'd by like parcels take and another A As Spanish Nesberlands their twine speak

An apprehension better understood When more compos'd our Mode of publique good. Till when, itis left with Mysteries of State That with their Leisure best their Sense dilate. And now my Story closer to declare, Which might some space for this digression spare: (As usefully sometimes the eye is stay'd When Prospects near it aptly are convey'd.) To Redding, next my Muse directs her Course, Which Town was compass'd by the Houses Force. And if made theirs, would the Advantage bring Of straitening more the Quarters of the King. Which known Inducements, with applause of Fame, The Earl's flow Genins Jointly did enflame. A Mah that Pop?lar Motions much indear?d, Tho' for their Compass he too slowly Stear'd. And fitter feem'd his Conduct to make Arong, Then with their cager Flames to hold it long. District As Furious Crowds the Man will most admire And I A That kindles from his Soul the quickest Eire. A dinay? A

Skippon

Skippon a Leader by the Houses Chose, To shape and act Designs when ripe for Blows; And had in Belgick War repute obtain'd From Towns by bold Attacques or Sieges gain'd. Besides a powerfull Talent in him lay T'Inflame his Party their own Canting way. Which Scripture Furies strongly did incite, For who ador'd Enthusiasms much could fight. Being thus compos'd, he Effex does present With Zeal Harrangu'd, instead of Complement. Letting him know, that Heaven, by Mighty Love. Did his Stout Spirit for their Cause approve. A Cause that boundless Sanctity extends, And for which Holy Light within contends. Captain Messias sure the Houses Led When their Votes you for Gospel-Conduct sped: An Act the pious Souls of Saints espouse, And, like the Holy Tribes, Life fearless lofe. You are their Moses, and but bid them fight, They'l out-do wonder by their Spiritual Might.

Can

Tho?

Can Redding Stop us, should Bulwarks be its Wall; Alas, like Rabbab, foon 'twill yield to fall. You lead as Trufty Ifraelites as they. 'Gainst that strong City, cou'd both Fight and pray. Our Guns are Mounted, our Approaches fixt, Let prayer with these be timely intermixt. Next let our Shot the distant Regions stun. Or tell how Loud we fight 'till Redding's won. This Pious Leader, if reputed fo, Did in those days for Major-Gen'ral go : And if men did his Genius rightly weigh, He could not bolder fight then he durst pray. Effex, who had this Zealot calmly heard, Tho' he for Modern Zeal but little car'd, Or found much struggling in his Thoughts to know Whether his older Faith were best or no. Besides some Tinctures of Allegeance still Had intermixture with his Stubborn Will: Did his divided mind perplex'dly pose How to differn what thought cou'd best propose I will Tho' fuch who strictest have his Soul defin'd, To Moderation grant him most inclin'd. To flein the Whilst soon this War expended so much heat, As Calmer thoughts cou'd not it's rage abate. And shews how men tast Politicks by Rote, That Mischiefs stir and next wou'd Good promote. And thus this Peer, who less his Cause admir'd Then Pop'lar Courtships to which he aspir'd: (Tho' feldom Crowds their fondness long allow, So near their Plaudits, their detractings go.) Did in this Juncture res'lutely intend, That Reddings Siege shou'd him to Fame commend When he to Skippon, and some eager Chiefs, Thus did express, to gain their smooth beliefs: What-e're the bufy World of me can fay Through cold mistake of my advis'd delay: Or that, no Feavour in my Veins I raife To vent hot Bloud, or rashly fight for praise. Which Caution if some Tempers do despise, They'le learn from Foes to grant my Conduct Wife.

Nor shall this Town long hope to be so bold As 'gainst our Power its own defence to hold: Tho' for its succour Aids from Oxford come; Unless, through Trenches, they can force their room. Afton against us does this place Command, A Captain much approv'd I understand : And adds to our esteem and Warlike use. If gainst his Conduct we this Town reduce. Which faid, his weighty Shot does Redding ply, Like force of Thunder burfting from the Sky. Walls, Houses, Roofs, their scatter'd ruins show, As what withstands the Canons mighty blow: Whose monstrous Strength doth various ruine force, And like no other thing Kills out of Course; As it by confus'd deaths does lives Bereave Of Children, mothers, whom worst foes would fave. So much beyond Mans Aim his brain defign'd, When wicked art did this huge murtherer find. Great Redding thus diffrest, quick rumour flew With noise of Guns whose sounds the danger shew.

With

With what approaches made and more begun, That foon the Town might be by Effex won. Whence Subsequent Expresses swiftly bring More Fatall News unto the afflicted King, and volume A Letting him know, as there vast bullets flew That roofs had torn, and their hard ruins threw High, as the Sulpherous blaft of Eina bears Stones, that like Thunderbolts from Rocks it Tears; Which falling Low, might Men or Creatures Maim, As here bold Afton's harm was much the fame, Who from a Tile, that by extravagant Chance A Shot had forc'd against his head to Glance, Receiv'd fo deep a Wound upon that part; As doubted 'twas above a Cure from Art. A strange disaster, and of more Import Because 'twas Afton's, by whose brave effort, And well prov'd conduct, Redding might have found Her Story, from his Valour, full Renoun'd. But Destiny had otherways design'd Glory unto his End enfuing Joyn'd:

As Fatall Inchand did in Future flow, organish will And long as stands * Tredah bis deeds 'twill Know. Feilding by Marshall right did then succeed. To hold the Town in wounded Afton's stead; A Cheif by many held approved in War, The for what Cause his Genius did appear At that time Clouded, has a dubious fenfe, Or darkly read from past Intelligence. Sonfe tell, that he too foon occasion gave That Effex might the Town furrendred have ! 'Altho' no power he wanted to maintain blod sind A What his Oppofers durst attempt to gain. Others, that he a Treaty wifely chose; Lest he was forc'd a strengthless place to lose, Which from the Circuit and the large extent, Might less Conspire with Warlike Management. Which Martial Sense if prevalent in him, Did much exeuse where others won'd condenm. A further Search fify Meafures need not guide Of things which Story-Criticks best decide. voisioci ma

* Sir Arthur Afton flain at the taking of Predah by Oliver Cromwell, where all that bore Arms were put to the Sword.

The

Creat Railes, whost the Kin-finis pierce infancey (;

cath his Predecelibr's Noble

Follof Experimental in Court

The FOURTH BOOK

The Argument.

Essential Shot, The place his Conduct wants.

Mean while the Poet finds an Interval:

The Love of Lysse and Lucas to rehearse,

Whose objects here denomination have
In Beauteous Rosalin and Flavira's slames.

The sight at Cawsham-bridge describ'd, and how Fielding by Treaty did the Town surrender.

The King at Oxford, next account must have.

Who foon did then a Martial Counsel call

To prevent Dangers Redding might befall.

For which he Ruthen, Rupert, Lucas, Lyle,

Chiefly selects, with others whose brave Toyle

Their deeds renown'd, and from Emergents knew

What did Import their Conducts most to do.

Great Ruthen, whom the King had Generall made Of his Fierce Infantry ( when Lyndfey paid His debt to Fame and Nature ) tho' of Race Beneath his Predecessor's Noble place. Full of Experience and in Courage great, An union which best Captains does compleat, To him, as order duly did require, The King thus speaks, to what may Fate aspire Whilst my Opposers Redding now furround, When Afton Lies disabl'd by a wound: And what my fuller Trouble does Increase, Feilding already Treats to yeild the Place: The Cause, or Prudence, I'le not now dispute : Or what bad Men too near me might promote; Who not by False Intelligeance alone Perplex the Sense and Safety of my Throne, But in my Methods fo themselves disguise As they Impead my being fingly wife. Tho' tis no feason now to Count such deeds, Whilst Eminent Redding our Affistance needs:

How Strong fo e're that Garrison is Mann'd HATYEN With fuch that dare their Enemies withfand: Did Feildings Soul their Valour not abate, As for the Towns Surrender he does Treat. When no Command of mine did him dispose To yeild the place on offer'd Terms by Foes. A dointy Think timely now what aptest you'd advise, 13 Hind A That to fave Redding looks both great and wife, a both Ruthen, whose Education did Impress No Courtly Mean or words of Splendid drefs; old of T But rather as a Souldier roughly taught, Could act the Sense which found Experience Brought. Unto the King, he then did thus reply, and prilleT Much Circumspection in Attempts shou'd lye, and va That Seiges would from Towns by force remove. Where men their Strengthen'd Stations first approve; With Lines, Redoubts, and Bulwarks strongly made, To Cut off all that shall such Posts Invade. And if experience best confirm'd we prize, Tis fafe to fear the worst from Enemies.

Nay rather fome Improbables allow, Then flight the Conduct of an Armed Foe. From which Contempt, how often have I known Some Captains fail that else deserved Renown Believe me Sir, that Conduct's cheifly wife Which hath most dread of Prudent enemies. A Skill grown old in Forraign Feilds I fought, And faw where headstrong Valout Mischeis brought; Whence torn and Shatter'd Armies did Lament The Bloud which they fo difmally had spent. Next him great Rupert speaks his Martiall Sense, And Soul Inflam'd with highest Conscience. Telling the King how much he was betray'd By some who near his Ear themselves convey'd. WhateMe does this Surprizing Leaguer show, By Effen guided before Redding now. Tis not because he flights your forces there, Or that his Soul does thence less flow appear: But his Incitement rais'd from some may own Neglect, or worfer Crime within that Town.

Small caufe there's elfe to doubt oppofers can in in it The place obtain which your Powers fully Man. Yet this Conjuncture fuch debates Ill fuit, and and As stay releif from Nicely spun dispute. Thousands Better to that fome perril to a Day, Doinsoin all Lest Reddings Loss be charg'd on faint delay. Tho' Clouds of Force do now begint that Town, Which when removed on your's will fix renown. Some days I hear to Feilding yet remain all of ashire Ere his Cold Freaties will effect obtain. Perhaps within that space he hopes to finde on the Royall Affistance from your Arms defign'd In straits of War the best resolves I hold Are fuch as in Attempts appear most bold. Lucas and Lyle this Councel foon approvid, Whose Warlike Souls less dangers fear'd then Lov'd Strict in embracing deeds of brave Import, And from their Valours friendship gain'd effort. None more Heroick in affections were, And like the Twins of Honour liv'd as dear.

Which in our Course of Story we'le rehearse,
With what their Fame, and end deserve from Verse
The King ( who like the Sun could Beams dilate	700
Conspicuously Serene and calmly great ) indire well a
His quickning Rays, and looks diffus'd a space;
And next their persons by apt speech did grace. 10
Expressing his Obligements from above, abuolo on
That him befriended with their worth and Love. idv
Besides the Gallant Leavies that did own
Much Valiant aid and duty to his Throne loo aid on Which foon cou'd Numbers in each County spread
Tho' lately he scarce Chief or Soldier had hine theyo	4
When forc'd his vast Metropolis to leave,	Sec. of
And like a Common Man his person save.	(market)
This from Unruly Faction did Commence,	· Property
Which heighten'd more the Senates Inflam'd Sense,
Whilst there, and in Great London many were	177
Who duly did their Prince both Love and fear,
Untill Compell'd by fury to fubmit io self show show
To others Vile disorder'd Rule, and Wit.

From which harsh guilt No outward Comfora Mid But did to humane Sense, as soon decline. My Confort fuff'ring in my Crowns diftress. Not all my Children fafe, or feen to Blefs. My Subjects round me by divisions rent, Nothing entire, but my within Content. The Scepter by Heaven's and I'de cheifly rule. That Piety may strengthen most my Soul. If this defert in me did first Incite My Subjects prowefs to Affift my right: When Treasure and all other Motives fail'd, That Scepters in distress have most avail'd; My Soul's bright Banner will my Cause renown. Shou'd Enfigns boldest Led not fave my Crown. Let my Example well with yours conspire, That Vileness from our Camp may soon retire." With fuch Licencious Evills that Combine T'avert the good I beg of powers divine. Think not the better Cause will have Success From such Assistance Heaven disdains to bless.

Believe your King, that Courage best prevails Which joyn'd with inward virtue Foes affails. O, might my Force but thus Confirm'd proceed. And with that Glory Ayd for Redding Lead. The King concluding thus; his Cheifs admir'd The temperate thoughts within his breast Conspir'd: So Stedfast in worst Exigents of State, As shew'd his Greatness far Surpass'd his Fate. Much had this Councill heedfully express'd, Before agree'd what feem'd that Juncture best. Some, Nimble Fortune would allow most kind; When Quick resolves to bold attempts were Joyn'd. This Mighty Cafars high Atcheivments tell, Whose fortune did in swift dispatch Excell, His Soul no Bays more blooming e're did prize Then such with Bold and soon attempts did rise. And were now Redding his, the felf-fame thing (Wou'd be his Measure) here advis'd our King. Others that well celerity Approv'd, By different Methods their discussions mov'd.

Who tho' allowing expeditious Fight, Debated much to State that Course aright; Besides disasters ponder'd oft besell Aggressors when strong Sieges they'd repell Some did for Caution and delay dispute, Urging that Time advantage might promote: Whose hours in War should thristily be spent, Lest Lives profusely lost they next repent. Nor could it to found Captains be unknown, How Armies but in fight of Leaguers shown Had on their Foes fuch Terror oft Impress'd, As they left Towns which were before diftress'd. And better we attempts should yet delay, Then add to Reddings loss a worser day. So variously Wars Science does admit Fineness to Polish its destroying Wit. Whilst in such Stratagems Nice Reason lays; The Beaft, refembles Man, that fubtilest preys. Soon did th'effect of these debates appear In the Fierce Measures as then Acted were, and the Much Much quicken'd by occasions hasty call, Lest the Beleaguer'd Town to Effex fall. The King's Commanders whose bold prowess stood Heighten'd by Native Glory of their Bloud, And what their Warlike Ancestors had done In Publick Exigents to gain renown: No fooner did their ready Flames receive Summons to March, but their Impressions gave Terror to all fuch Militants they led; And what did most a vigorous Influence spread: The King his Person to this March design'd, And for their Grace his forward Conduct joyn'd. But e're my Muse such horrors does rehearse That must have room within her Martial Verse; Some Gentler passions represent their Claim, If Verse can give their Merit unto Fame: Or fing Couragious Lucas with brave Lyle High as their worth deserv'd or Martial Toyle. And to the Muses glory next declare Illustrious Love sublim'd by Souls of War.

This

This great Example Female Charms do show! When in a Hero's Joyn'd a Lover too. Nor shall Flavira thy bright Story be, Heap'd in Oblivious dull Calamity. With what the Beauteous Rosalin's fost flame, May Merit from Records repriv'd by fame. Many renown'd these splendors had admir'd, Whilf their Souls withes differently conspir'd. In Rosalin's smooth breast remain'd no space Where full affection did not Lucas place, Yet so serenely calm did that admit, As spoke her flower of Love and facile Wit. Flavira more severely did apply, To heighten flames of Magnanimity. Judging that perills to her Lover brought. The Haughty Trophies by her wishes fought. Nor wou'd she yield Fames trusty Tongue cou'd blaze Valour that equall'd Lyle's Heroick praise. Too proudly glorying, that her powerfull Charms Joyn'd with her Lovers Soul propense to Arms.

Forgetting that too often Stars denv'd To Crown the Ends of Womans daring pride. These Beauties that did Lineally derive A Gen'rous Bloud did worthily Contrive, How they might strictest Amity compleat, And like their Lovers prove in Friendship great. Oft they prolong'd discourse till setting Sun, Rehearing deeds this dreadfull Warr were done. Oft had they broke repose in hope to hear Events of Fights in which their Hero's were. Nor did the Objects of their passion find No different Method to their Values Joyn'd. In Lucas Valour fiercely did abound, And firm as Hanniball in Conduct found: When Fields were most Imbru'd with bloudy streams, Or Foes were charg'd Renown'd for Martiall flames. But in Great Lyle another Scipio feem'd, Calm as best Fortitude wou'd be esteem'd, Or Soul that's mild and Tracticably great, And, like that Roman, Prowers cou'd compleat.

Thefe

These Hero's who did gloriously contend How each might most appear a signall friend, Had mixt with Intervalls of Martial thought, The foft discoveries from loves Text were taught. Dilating much Flavira's sprightly Charms, Her darting Beams with her applause of Arms. Besides the Epithites they did allow To Rosalin's smooth Grace and Feature due. And might pose aptest Story to convey, Where love and Merit best direct their way. Lucas, whose Soul was fill'd with daring flame, And thirst of deeds that fiercely purchas'd fame : Relentless to all softness of the mind, By which his Martial heat might be declin'd: Unto Couragious Lyle did thus express; Much is my heart obliged to confess Admired Rofalin's serenest Praise, And what her blooming splendors yet may raise. Nor is't unknown to me how many Brave At Beauty's Tempting shrine vouchfaf'd to crave :

This even Achilles did when he obey'd Deidamia's Charms, tho' Greeks then miss'd his aid. But ne're of Lucas story shall relate, That Amorous leifure stay'd his warlike heat. Or that for him Gay Hymens Tapers burn, Whilft Loyall blouds obig'd it's loss does to mourn: Or Foes shall dare their Prince oppose with Arms, Howe're I value womans lovely Charms. This speech the worthy Lyle severer thought. Then what loves Maxims usually had taught; And cou'd not but with Generous pity fee, The Grief of Soul which Rosalin's might be. Whose sense tho' Calm, as dawn of Gentlest day, Might vield refentment at unquoth delay, But much had Lyle Flavira's fense repin'd, And known Caprice unto her Value loyn'd: Prone to exact from his Atcheivments more Then he wish'd Men should from his deeds explore. Discerning well how often Mortall praise, Does less Mans Merit then detraction raise.

Thefe

T

T

N

In

En

These apprehensions in the worthy Lyle, Convey'd by looks instead of words their stile. An outward proneness Nature does dispense When genuinly discribed her inward sense. And from the Soul's Internall worth implies Some Trouble in the Face that truth denies. In which strict Mirror Lucas soon perceiv'd Th' Emotions which his Lyle within had griev'd. And held it no less worthy to Aslay, If Martiall thoughts con'd his concerns allay. To whom he thus delivers, if great friend Thou wou'dk with me thy Gallant worth extend; Think not the Harmony of Lute and Voice, Or Face which the Effeminate Man can most rejoyce; Should mix their Gentle Fervors with the Flame That Spirits deeds which spread a Soldiers Fame. Not that I Love perverfly do decline In the Attractive form of Rosaline: Enough my Soul her value can admire, When Mars there leaves a space for Amorous fire.'

This faid, to their Commands thefe Hero's fpeed, As aptest Stations whence their fame shou'd spread. The Royall Forces before Redding drew. When like a difmall Round they foon did view An Armies Compass to a Leagure form'd. Not from Intent the Town shou'd then be storm'd: Since as in Course of Story has been told. Feilding did Treaty for surrender Hold. And e're the Kings Battalions thither came, The time of yielding fully known to Fame. Treaty, best Captains sometimes wisely chuse, That by Concessions they may cheapest loofe. Deeming that he too much provoketh Fate, Who leaves to Fortune all that force may get. But Wars intrigu's when of this faving kind, Rarely obliging disquisitions find. Whilst most their boldest Criticisms bestow, On deeds that Caution more then Valour show. Beside close Contracts might from gain arise, Since Gold did often strongest Towns surprize.

Propenfly

Propenfly Judging that each worldly Fact Does private Int'rest most design'd compact. All which from Fonds of fraud in Humane Race, And Coveteous Guilt too aptly Men imbrace; To fuch Constructions Mortalls do incline. As like their vileness others they define. The King whose Prudence greatest was alone, Might from Events have been Auspitious known; Had not his Gentle Soul been too propense, Withdrawn by other far Inferiour Sense. And from that Times important Juncture shows, That Princes best their perspectives dispose, When they difcern, from Councills they receive, That wifer to themselves their Souls can give. Some that wou'd to the King prefage fuccess, Added unto their hope their Garnish'd dress. Judging that Kings fuch Courtship well Allow ThatGrandieur feem in Exigents to show. Others affur'd that Feilding would not fail, By a Courageous fally to prevail:

If first the Royall Conduct gain'd some Post That might impead the bold befiegers most. Which Motive being less Circumspect through hast, Occasion'd Perills to ensue as fast. Whilst Effex Cawsham-Bridge had then possest. And of his daring Arms there plac'd the belt. Yet o're this pass 'twas res'lutely decreed That relief should to distress'd Redding speed. By many cenfur'd a Pernicious Courfe, Since Nature there had posted too her Force. Befides 'twas thought fome Leaders least perceiv'd What might that time have better been Atchiev'd. On Barkshire side, where large Campaigns abound, (The Scopefull Bleffings of that fertile Ground) And through which (Straiten'd less) the Royall Power Might Reddings Leagure have attacqu'd that hour. But Heaven determin'd Cawsham-Bridge shou'd name That days Events which wonder gave to Fame. Rupert, his Station took to force this pass, (And fure 'twas hot where his the onfet was)

No Fove when painted with a dreadfull Brow. Bidding his Lightening burst with Thunders Blow, Could represent this Princes Conduct then, Or Shot far furer Thunder'd deaths to Men. Tho' losses on his side were many found, Whose Soul enough taught daring to abound. Whilft smoak and Flame did so promiscuous blend, As Fames best eye, which she did thither fend, Was forc'd with fome diforder to relate How Chiefs renown'd and Soldiers mingl'd Fate. Tho' no bold deeds or Life profusely loft, Nor what did praise their res'lute Conduct most, Could from the hardy Foes their post obtain, Who thought no loss too dear cou'd that Maintain. And by recruited Courage foon Supply'd The Rooms where Lives before had Stoutest dy'd. But leaving thus this Prince engag'd in Fight, Some other prospects do my Muse Invite: Whereby this days fierce exit may be known, Tho' not each Circumstance nor Action shown:

Which,

Which tedious Chronicles more aptly spread, And Stories where their Lumbers fully read. Ruthen a Captain long approv'd by Fame, In Wars harsh Winters pass'd and Summers Flame; And by Time Tutor'd, in himself beheld, How Ruffe experience in his years excell'd. Nor less the King his Antient prowess grac'd, In being (as told) his Captain Generall plac'd. And had the Soldiers part as fully flown, In his Attempt to fave the fieged Town. No Chief his Conduct cou'd have then outdone, If Fortune had been that day to be won. Much did his brave example then incite, His Soldiers Valours led by him to fight; And where observ'd less hardy to Asfail, He Strove by speech to win them to prevail; Which as his Martial plainness did admit (The dialect his Soul did Chiefly fit.) He then did utter, much in words like thefe: Known 'tis to me how hardly Men appeale

The Hearts disorder, when with Terror shook, brid Or can't undaunted on disasters look : Which shou'd least disaffect stout Soldiers Mind, And his encrease of Honour, thence declin'd. alel meed No step like that in Bloudy Fields I fought, Or when Commanded shrank in Act or Thought. This Me from lowest Files did Gradual raise, Untill attain'd a steady Captains Praise. By the fame Method let your Actions show That I your General am, and Leader now. This Speech deliver'd with a Soldiers Grace, And Brevity well fuiting Time and place, With what his long prov'd Conduct did Import To give their hope and Courage more effort: Soon did his drooping Militants dispose More vigorously against their daring Foes. And now Deaths Language foon by Guns was spoke, Limbs scatter'd were with halfs of Bodies broke. Some Valiant Heads shot off, and as men Tell Their Trunks a while stood headless e're they fell.

And where perhaps hereafter may be found Limbs(with their Bodies) ne're went under ground. Whilft Lives that by fuch Seperation fall. Seem less to further Resurrections Call, If, in that Instant, Missing parts must find Their bodies tho' to distant dust confin'd. What Man can doubt how various death was here. Or how much thin'd by loss Files did appear. When Peals against Peals Death concey'd in Course; Like Leaves, Men dropt, that feel rough Autumns force. Tho' this from no fide fury could withdraw. Where Danger could not English Courage awe. Whilst Fortune yet a wavering Station held, Who least to Arms grants favours uncompell'd. Effex w'had thought his hope enough fecur'd, Began to doubt how he stood then affur'd: The Bridge, on which h'ad plac'd his stoutest Files, Strow'd thick with Bodies there gave up their Toils. The Gentle streams that underneath did Glide, With lowder Sobbs feem'd then to hafte the Tide;

As through this Bridge the Billows had took flight With greater Noise and Trembling at this Fight. When breathless Corps into this stream were Thrown And on the Fleeting Billows gashly shown: Till in some Calmer hour (in stead of Graves) They funk to Earth at bottom of these Waves. These fights the res'lute Earl did little please, Besides disturb'd how he might next appease The Clamorous Houses, should his Conduct fail, Or not as was Expected then prevail. Enough observed how stiffy some had strove To draw from him the Ruling Parties Love: And did their new Erected Creatures raife, That fubt'ly blemish'd his Loud vulgar praise. And as they spread the value of their own, Had their Neglects on his Atchievments thrown. Whose Poplar Soul by all Attractions sought To be Fames Jewell in the peoples Thought. Detesting all that did aspire to rise Like him Conspicuous unto Common Eyes.

Or bid him doubt that, with few steps of Time, Some other Grandeur to his height might Climb. Which apprehensions he cou'd least depress, Whilst doubtfull seen by him that days success. Skippon, whose bolder Zeal was strictly Joyn'd To what their fighting party had defign'd: And as a Prime Enthuliaft won on Men Who chose their Saints from sturdy fighters then. His Martial Confolation then applys (Fitting that Juncture) with erected Eyes. Thou Peer, faid he, Heav'ns darling, whom Gods call Hath set to own his Cause before us all, And does this day our pious Breafts Inspire, As was that Chiefs when full of fmoke and fire. He faw the Bush, a Flaming Tipe to him That Ifraels Force should Enemies consume. Tho at that fight his stoutest Nerves did shake, ( As with us Zealots may be faid to quake ) Till more confirm'd how 'twas a Heavenly fign, That God's felect should Valours flame refine.

Let this our boldest Enemies perceive. And from their daring hazards death receive: As o're this pass their Files would force their way. Till full by our's repuls'd this fignal day. Doubt not but 'twill even Keinton-field exceed, Or what at Brandford might have been Atchiev'd, If firmer Soul'd our conduct on had brought The Chearfull zeal that for us that time fought. All which I Instance with a Godly Flame, That your deeds now might more exalt your fame. The Earl who did not much in words abound, Or Canting Glosses then were frequent found With Scripture Hero's, little feem'd to fay, Or what enough approved to fight their way. And now both fides had furious Conflicts brought As high as Valours Zenith cou'd be fought. If not, to be yet more Supremely Brave, Wish'd that their Souls unbody'd force might have, Or unconfin'd unto fuch outward parts Whose power was less then vigour of their hearts. DEA The

The Royalifts like fierce Aggressors strove Th' Essexians hardy prowess to remove. Tho' these like firmest Rock their Station held, Too roughly fix'd to be by Waves repell'd. Whilst Bands of Billows 'gainst their harden'd Might Bursting retire as more supply their Fight. And thus the Terrors of this day were feen, With dismal Slaughters that did intervence. Some loudly ask'd what Motives cou'd Confine Fielding that Instant within Reddings Line. And not his vigorous Sally then apply T' divert at least the Stubborn Enemy. O gride of Confidering how much Bloud was cast away In expectation of his aid that day. The riguons to live TO Others with groffer Murmurs did reflect, Upon the Cause they judg'd of his neglect: And thus by virulent speech his Honour Stain'd, Which to that hour unquestion'd had remain'd. Saliw So various feem'd the Sense and Deeds of some, That would the Soul and Facts of others doom.

And

And which were here too tedious to repeat. With all that Dy'd or Liv'd Heroick Great. As needless'twere bold Lucas's worth to tell, Or how undoubted Lyle did then excell : Who did in Warlike Actions fo aspire, As pos'd Hyperboles to advance them higher. But Valiant Dornland fince thy Mighty Mind Had much peculiar Glory then adjoyn'd, And fuch as did thy Eminent Figure raife Above the Levell of Affociate Praise. My Muse shall here preserve thy Copy so, As most Transcendent thou alone must go. Who tho' a Voluntier that day didft ferve. That uncommanded thou might'st more deferve : And with an Active Courage unconfin'd, Unto the Bravest Actions formost joyn'd. When judging that his Parties Strenuous Fight Must lessen, if not reinforc'd their Might. And fearing that some Messengers Mischance, Or Falshood hinder'd Feilding's soon Advance,

In some like Ominous Pendants hung too near The Grace vouchsafed them by the Royal Ear: Since he conceiv'd the Kings Will did import, That Feilding, by some Sally's bold effort Should passage gain for his Stout Foot and Horse To aid the King, and his Relief inforce. Revolving thus, his fearless Steed he guides, Swimming the River twixt these fighting sides. To this adjoyn'd a Meadow's wide extent, (Whose Pregnant Green more Liquid growth was lent When this Stream's spreading Arms did smoothly glide T'Imbrace the Surface as a Teeming Bride) And having pass'd it starts his Valiant Race, Where he beheld direct and open space, That from the River to the Town did lead, And that way guides his swift and hearty Steed. When Fortunes aid, that best Designs can wing, Did Dornland then unlet or danger'd bring Within the Town's Command; but what furprize This bold Adventure gave his Enemies, u

C

Y

0

T

H

En

W

Di

Th

Li

Un

Or how prevented, in that Difmal Hour, From Intercepting him by Armed Power! Must found Conjecture no less wonder give, Then what admiring Men from Fame receive. Whilft like fwift Bird, that Wings the Airy way Where Rav'nous Fowl dispers'dly watch for Prey, Yet with their Greedy Gorges must attend Untill with flower Feather'd they contend, Or with more swift furprise their Tallons bring To grasp the Bird did them before out-wing: He then arriv'd; and next to Feilding spoke Briefly this Sense, with Meen compos'd and Look. Enough my hast the King's Concern implys, As those fight yonder, if so far your eyes, With any Brave by you Commanded here, Did from fad Opticks their Allarums share. And shame 'twere Redding such shou'd now confine, That Blush to fland within a Leaguer'd Line; Like rows of Cyphers to no use amount, Unless, in you, an Elmite guides their County

E're Royal Bands their forc'd discomfits show, Tho' unfought Feilding, faw them vanquish'd fo. If you no timely Summons yet has found That bids you hast your Drums and Trumpets found. And to your Kings Assistance win your way: By me 'tis faid, nor apprehend this day . But with Couragious odds you will enforce, What's yet undone by Royal Foot and Horse. Our Foes enough their Consternation feel, Who else had hinder'd my Steeds nimble heel, Which passing near their Parties faces brought Me hither, by no bold Pickeerers fought. And if to guide or aid your resolute way, You'le any Stress of Conduct on me lay; Be well affur'd that Dornland shall be thine As far as worthy Motives can enjoyn. These words deliver'd with perspicuous Grace, To Feilding's Soul amazement gave a space : Before by speech he utter'd this reply; What Sense will your Heroick worth deny,

That thus contemning Perills brought you here, Your Valour too adorn'd with Loyall Care. Yet know that Fieldings heart none need incite, Who fcorns to live and to be bid to fight. By Stars I vow, and all Supreamest Good, No chill nor disaffection in my bloud Shivers my heart, or bids me turn unjust Unto the Reputation of my Trust. Who Strid Inte Believe me, worthy Man, I'de rather chuse on guight This day with other Brave my life to loofe, ned along Then Rand fuch Peevish censure which I know Some meanly Soul'd will on my Value throw; Did not my Stedfast honour me restrain, and and a land And Treaty, that adds links unto the Chain; Which I admitted after well observ'd, The Place too weak, by me, to be preserv'd. Were Redding else invested this bold hour, With all the Houses best confirmed Power, The King should not have fought and I stand still, Had no express to Feilding spoke his will.

ı,

But Prudence	loyn'd to Warlike Justice Rays	dI
Me from Atter	npting fo inglorious praise.	01
O That my Pr	ince might this foon understand,	3
E're he to loss	does longer fight Command:	i'A
Or hope my Co	anduct may him now repair,	Ţ
Since in my bre	ach of Faith his Cause would share.	0/
Much had this f	peech the Gen rous Dornland mov'd,	ai
Who Strict Int	egrity in Man approv d;	nj.
Judging no For	titude deferv d that name,	loč.
Unless best fuff	ice does Compleat the claim.	dI.
Which Though	t well Ponder'd, next he Feilding leav	es,
And unto Cour	age and his Fortune gives	108
His Persons Safe	ety, refolv'd his Trusty steed	O
The same way t	ack unto the King should speed.	n A
But foon Percei	v'd his Foes had Stations chofe,	W
Where they con	d fiercely his feturn oppose,	T
Or any durft wi	th darfing hazzard bring and one	W
Intelligence or f	ith all the Houf, gaish ad moth blank	W
That might the	ng aged Fallang's Soul relay in guild on	T
And Effex leave	fruitles Truce to Tax. derges on be	H
tri i	ε I	ne

The valiant Dornland seeing now how fast The Furious Enemy did accost his haste; Before, behind, and round about him fpread, Admiring how they fail'd to leave him dead: Whilft Shot, Tike Lines unto a Point delign'd, Flew as no Center but his Heart 'twou'd find. On all sides in his flight he fought with some, Through others to their Fate he forc'd his room, Untill his Nimble Courfer and his Fight, At once out-did his fwift Purfuers Might. And in this bold Adventure did receive Such Marks of Glory with best Verle may live, His Vesture torn with Shot, as Ensigns show, When Eyes the Bearers Valour thence allow. Befides fome Scars upon his Vifage feen, Which told how sharp his perils then had been. Thus he return'd and to the King made known Nobly, what Sense of Feilding was his own, With all Averments by that Chief were made, Why he his Princes Mandate disobey'd:

Since he oblig'd by Truce must Redding yield, And not to fave that help to win the Field. The King now Dornland's worth perceived more, Then from observance first he did explore. Refolving thence that with his Kingly Grace He'd fuch remark upon his Merit place, That should most aptly unto Fame convey The Loval value he atcheiv'd that day. Saying, Thy Prince this Jewell gives to thee; And if prefage of his Auspicious be, His Cause shall prosper with renown'd success, Whilst thee, to wear this gift, Heavens will shall bless. This worthy Mans Intelligence thus told, Soon mov'd the King to bid that his force should No longer fuffer by continuing fight Which fo much Fruitless prospect gave to sight. And thus both fides with too great loss withdrew, Since English bloud did that more precious shew. Much like to Ships with Masts and rigging tore, And Men disabl'd, next must tack to shore,

Where

Where with most leisure and industrious Care, idw of Their dismall loss and figures they repair.

The FIFTH BOOK.

As leaft and adve.

Whofe Souls are to

The Argument.

Redding deliver'd, by a Martial Call
The Actions Tax'd, and Feilding doom'd to dyen Conduct deprav'd the Court and Field affects,
Which Dornlands soul does ominously revolves
Who unto Polyaster next repairs,
From his deep Science prospects to discern
Of this Wars future Actions and Events.

The Tongue of Fame, whose Ensign is the Growd, When various Clamours she disperseth Lowd, Or Throws on Mortals multiply'd Mistake, As they through Errors-Glass their Prospects take. Whence oft to Vulgar thoughts such Mediums rise That feed the Ignis-fatuus of their Eyes.

Nor seldom do contests in Camps proclaim

How boldly Militants Impose on Fame.

To which Court-Minions their concurrence yield. When they with Martialifes Intrigue in field. And would on Measures (by the Armed chose, ) Their complifance most plausibly dispose. Whose Souls are to fuch gawdy Morals joyn'd, As least unto adversity are kind; Or genuinly the deeds of men Express, When Int'refled their value to deprefs. All which unhappy Feildings Case now prov'd, Gainst whom both Court & Camp displeasures mov'd. Nor less then dreadfull Martial sense must free His person charg'd with Faithless Infamy. Which did the Kings just Temper more Incense, As Reddings Loss was aggravated thence. And thus before this Rigid Bar did come, The once Fam'd Fielding, to receive his doom. Whose former worth no Minigation gain'd, As he then feem'd to Honours Jury stain'd. By whose strict Verdict sentence soon was past, And day appointed that must be his Last;

From Executioners that Mars does call, When his Delinquents shou'd most daring fall. Tho' Honor'd held if they by Engines dye, I do !! That Force with utmost dread the Arm'd to ar. Whilst he with Constant Fortitude Comply'd To bear th'Infliction 'gainst his Life decreed. Whence many worthys had more value placid On him to unconcern'd his end embrac'd. As Gen'rous confidence, when Death is near, Implys the Soul disdains her Cause to Fear. Which worth in him Compassion more Inclin'd. With fuch difcernments as might aptest find Regards of Mercy, if those Motives might His death prevent and wounded Honour right. Confidering next if like a Soldier He Had yielded Redding to the Enemy, On Terms that prudent Captains would embrace, When they'd furrender fortified place. The Scituation weigh'd and what might thence Induce him not to hazzard its defence.

All which discurssions with their Calm and heat, Found foon Conveyance to the Royall Seath air Which Pallace-Perdu's watchfully attend, nonell and That their Address may thither first ascend. Whilft, of Court Intercessors most admir'd. * Beauty for Feildings fafety then Conspir'd: And with the Eminent Lusters of her Face. Begg'd for this Chief her Sovereigns Act of Grace. With Tears that most resistless, Men surprize, When made the grief and Prayer of womens eyes. Which Far Compassion in her Sovereign mov'd Who Chaftly Female Gracious spendors lov'd. And held no Bounty by their Charms obtain'd, But was their value when with Virtue gain'd. die ball And to this worthy of her Sex thus faid on maintained Happy is Fielding for whom you have paid, public like The Value of your pity flied in Tears: Jan's wind I no Tho' Warlike Sense a Ruffer course oft Stears.

tensition weign'd and we

* Supposed to be the then Dutchess of Richmond.

Then Mercies Milder Orb or Conduct show, Whose Beams from Breasts of Kings, most boundles Nor has Attentless ear to Mercies call Been e're my Crime, or Subjects unjust fall. Which Candid mildness shin'd throughout my Reign. When Sanguine guilt did other Scepters Stain. And if Offenders I less prone forgive, Their Souls may in their bodies blush to live. But Providence, whose secret Acts of Grace Incline the hearts of Kings to Mercies Cafe; And like Heavens bounties in the Orbs above. Do Sovereign Conduct more benignly Move: To which within the Royal Sphere was joyn'd Wales blooming Prince, whose soon compassion shin'd. As Princely Souls, when most enrich'd by Heaven, Have Mercies Talents early to them given. What verse his Royal Graces can declare In Acts (his Mirrors) fo transparent are. And in a Second Charles the Former known, As Kings whose Souls no Interregnum own.

va.

And thus unto his Royal Father faid. Th' Address that for your Gracious Pardon's made By this fair object, let my Heart conspire To aid as her atttactive Beams require. Not is't denied that with my youthfull years Compassion flows where Woman sheds her Tears. By whose bright Sex I early do explore, That hard 'tis to deny when they Implore. These Intercessions of a Royal Son Much on the Kings forgiving Nature won. Glad that his Princely Heir did then appear So Ripe in Mercy e're his Manhood year. As if prefaging that in Future Time, When evil Men had highest rais'd their Crime, His Fam'd oblivious shou'd make Subjects know How much the Father by the Son they owe. When first the Condemned Feilding Liv'd to see Himself acquitted by their Clemency. Atter a Warlike Counsel had decreed He shou'd to Mars as Sacrificed Bleed.

 $\mathbf{B}$

By which 'tis feen how oft th' Impeached find Their fellow-Subjects less then Monarchs kind. Much did this Gracious Act the Court divide, As parties there did different Measures guide. Who under Princes Good Improve the Skill Of being most Artfull as they fave or kill. And in extremes of things fuch thoughts Impart As little shew the Courtiers Candid Art. Or as some late Caballs disposed were, That could for interest love or hate endear : Seldom permitting Just concern to come Nearer the Heart then their cold Lobby-Room. Tho' Applications early vifits make, In hope a kinder Patron next may wake: Or not Transcendent vileness so extend. As, more then Prince, wou'd present ends befriend. Which Sense that Season did with some abound. (And with their vailed Treason after found) Held with the Subtle Houses to Conspire, To whom they Royal fecrets fent for hire.

Of which not few suspected were that time, But most the false Sydesmonds impious Crime, Who could fuch specious Measures give to things, That Serpent-like his Soul deceiv'd the Kings. No Pallace e're did fuch a Synon know, As Measures yet to come will fully show. Often he had unto the Foe convey'd, How by his Sovereign Wars designs were lay'd. And whence the wary Enemy might wave, Attempts intended, or advantage have. All which Clandestine Arts had greater source From the Composure of the Royal Force. flame, Whose Ranks most fill'd with Gen'rous bloud and That with profuser courage Courted Fame Then Martiall caution strictly did allow, Occasion'd their disasters to ensue. At Night their quarters forc'd when fometimes they Watchless, or more supine disorder'd lay. The Gen'rous Dornland this had duely weigh'd, And how through their Miscarriage, or betray'd;

The

The Loyal Mil'tants oft defeated were, And from Enormous loss might Tax their care. But more did Dornlands bufy thoughts debate. The gift and strange Prediction which so late His Sovereign on his Merit had bestow'd, And like Kings Souls remote import foreshowed. And next revolving in his Auxious mind, If letter'd Man could Explanation find Of thoughts abstrufely on his sense prevail'd, And must by deepest Science be unvail'd. None like the famous * Polyaster He Deem'd fit to Salve this feeming Mystery; By Emblem might the Kings concern unfold, And what of Dornland was to be foretold. Polyaster who might weighty Story Fifl, With all that could Illustrate humane skill; Having to wonder Arts and Science shown, And was then Poet more Paophetick known. Whose then aboad near Oxfords confines stood, Adorn'd with shades and the adjoyning flood.

* A Denomination under which is here described a Character of Science.

Like Mansions by the wifer Ancients chose, When they'd from Worldly cares themselves repose. Or had on purpose thoughtfull leisure took T'unfold the secrets of Great Natures Book. Him Dornland visits when most Mortall eyes Were clos'd by fleep, and only restless skies To Usher night their sparkling Tapers lent; Till the Worlds eye furvey'd the days extent. Coelestiall Motions, with their Sublime Powers, Observ'd by him in many usefull hours. Which carefull life was in his Visage seen, Where in his comely Age did intervene Wrinckles, which fhew'd his Soul enough opprest, Tho' in that Warfull Time no fword depress't The Peacefull Contemplation of his mind: Who did like the great * Syracusean find Esteem that spread with largest wings of Fame, And with his Accurate knowledge blaz'd his Name.

T

* Archimedes the Famous Mathematician of Syracuse.

His Lifes Strict Method did example raile, The Reg'lar Ancients most approved praise, With Contemplations fo dispos'd that he To Heaven and Time might still least debter be. Whose precious Hours his richest thought employ'd, When he, as life's best Steward, them enjoy'd. Admiring how the Prodigalls of Time Durst, that debauch'd, Annex unto their Crime. As if the Worlds swift eye did beams bestow For flothfull Mans Excentrick use below: Or Stars, that ow'd the Sun vast fums of Light, Did shine to aid the wicked deeds of Night. With Prayer he first began, that aid divine Might to his Sublime thoughts affiftance joyn; Nor did he close his Eyes at Night to rest, Till kneeling he had own'd days founder bleft. Wondring that Mortalls largely con'd receive, And Heaven, the Authour, Thanks to sparing give. Nor more his outward form of life compos'd. Then fitting what his inward Gifts proposid

His Food with best prov'd Temperance did agree, When healthfull Life had long Antiquity: And Simple meats the bodies Strength refin'd More fuitably Affistant to the Mind. This wifely Antient Contemplations rais'd, When Temp'rate life and Science were most prais'd. Nor pains or Conduct did he then remit. That more divine might raise his sublime Wit. And when his Studies Intervall requir'd, By that diversion too his Soul aspir'd. His Room of Contemplation duely grac'd With niches, where Compendiously were plac'd Statues of fuch whose Learning did impart Truchs Maxims, Crown'd by Mathematick Art. That like the Queen of Science does convey Proofs too Divine for Men to disobey. Of these he most Intentively beheld Such as to Brittains Gloty most excell'd. And whom of all had most admired been, The Matchless Napier, here was likened seen.

Who feem'd by Figure in his hand to bear Hs Logorithim-Tables which his fame declare. Above what former demonstration wrought, Or Problems by men beld inspir'd were Taught. Of whom another Euclide well might learn, Or Ptolomy his works outdone discern. Whilst this fam'd Scots Arithmetick does teach, What Power of Numbers ne're before could reach. And easier farr did Archimedes find Sea-Sands outfum'd then Napiers profound mind. Whose Numbers added Multiplication serve, Substracted nothing from Division swerve. Which Art did to Astronomy Convey High Computations his most facile way, higher A good And taught Geometry to lay afide Old Sines and Tangents long a tedious Guide Wonder of Man that gave fuch knowledge Birth As did at once oblige both Heaven and Earth. Next him Polyaster did with Reverence view ball. The Famous Briggs, whose Admir'd products shew

K 3

The

The Science in his Orb he did extend, And, unto Former, improved Talents lend. The Artfull Staturist so his form exprest, That his fled looks feem'd warm in Stone to reft. Beholding Strictly as with lively fight, The Trig'nometrick skill he brought to light; Which lines did represent in Bodies Cut, Before him on a neat Supporter put. Besides the Reg'lar Solids, and the Art His shadows on them did to hours impart. Next whom renowned Ourred's Figure stood, No less approv'd the Carvers Art in wood. Whereon a Girdle round his Loyns was wrought Deep Analytick questions by him Taught. At which, as emblem'd, hung that wondrous key, His Mathematick Clavis did Convey. These Fam'd, with many other Learned were Preserv'd in Image by Polyaster's Care. His Mind, Invited, by their Figures feen, To be in Science great as they had been.

By which Impulse he oft computed things, Remotest Art to humane Knowledg brings. Rvolving if the Circles long fought Square, Past Computations do aright declare. And how the Wonder of the doubled Cabe Had been attempted, or a Clearer Tube Then Galileus skill had brought to pass By Optick Doctrine, or his wondrous Glass. Leaving Men doubtfull whether Orbs above Did Worlds within their rapid Circles Move. Or how the Earth did to his Tube appear To rowl, instead of Sun, her Annuall Sphear. Like which high Theorems did Polyaster find Refults of his no Less Stupendious mind. Who by his Mighty knowledge did Compleat Productions worthy all Precedent great. Next these the mighty Hobs he well beheld, Whose Modern Soul with Gyant reason fill'd, O're-match'd past Phylosophick strength of Thought, By Science in his Nat'rall Method Taught.

Discharg'd of Terms, the Schools Imposed Dress, Where Art Fram'd words, the proper fense few guess : And in their Letter'd Ocean undescry'd The Chart that more refin'd cou'd knowledge guide. Whilst this vast man oppos'd the Worlds mistake, And did his Learning Nature's Patron Make, To Honour whom Polyafter did allow His Form in Cedar Curious Carv'd fhou'd show, And as that Substance does in Trees exceed The height of all in Forrests Tallest Breed, So the Transcendent Genius of his Mind Was, in his Likeness, thus to Fame defign'd. Nor less was his peculiar value shown To Persons whom the Muses did renown, Their outward Forms with fuch high Life defign'd, As nought feem'd miss'd but their Ætheriall Minde : Above Apelle'es Pencill to express, Or what from stroke of Sculpturists Men guess. No Imag'd Looks or Artfull Features tell How the Souls Venus does with Mortalls dwell.

Which

Which Sublime Thought by Polyafter weigh'd, And wit this Islands Glory far difplay'd, Through Powerfull Sons of Phebus by whose sense The Mighty Nine best raptures did dispense. With these around their brows were Lawrells plac'd, Large next to those Apollo's Temples Grac'd; Of which, he Chancer, Spencer, much belield, And where their Learned Poems most excell'dan mod W Tho' words now obfolete express their Flame, lab A Like Gemms that out of Fashon value Claim, and on I Near these in Statue witty Shakspere stood, ow in W Whose early Plays were somest next to Good. And Like's vast Dramatick Foundershow'd Bounties of Wit from his large Genius flow'd. Whose worth was by this Learned duely weighldow As in Effigie there he flood displayed not know shorted But more stupendious to his Soul appeared hald to Proportions which great Johnsons Form declar'd. Whose deep Effigies he wish'd longer date Then Polish'd art in stone cou'd Gelebrate.

Admiring

Admiring next the wit that Crown'd his Bays WhoseScenes were works, when most fell short of Plays. So aptly by him Characters exprest. That shew'd his artfull hand and Learning best. While other Dramaticks like Planets were. Rambling to find their Center near his Sphere. A Province Phabus did on him bestow, When made his Wits Lieutenancy below. As duly he did Flachers Soul explore, The Stages most Luxurian witty Store: With worthy Beamount to his Figure loyn'd, Adapted most the Muses Twins in mind: Whose Genius To conspir'd that Beamount Might Divide with Fletcher wit by equall right. Nor less then past some present he admir'd. Whose work for Envys darts too high Afpir'd: Or black detraction or abusive Pen, Fowl'd oft to Stain the worth of living Men. Thus did Polyafter usefully transmit These wondrous Authors of best Art and wit

To Future Age, wishing their Souls renown. Might long survive their Forms in wood and Stone. Admiring Dornland had beheld a space This Learned Worthys Comely years and Grace, Before his wonder gave expression way By words to utter what he meant to fave Who thus with grave humility began, Father of Science more then Soul of Man Has yet lmbellish'd, or by Heaven allow'd To look through Vails which inmost Nature shrowd Or Starry Providence, that to Vulgar fight Appears like Spangles, which Vain Souls delight. As if that Heaven profusely did beflow Such eyes above as faw not things below. O, tell me then, if to thy fearch tis shown, What Future iffue may be fadly known Of this outrageous War, or thence shall be The King and Publicks future Destiny. The Noble Dornland this no fooner faid. And Polyaster had his looks survey'd:

But his discerning eyes began apace To power their Tears upon his Aged Face : E're he his deep Conceptions thus exprest; Pardon thou worthy Man the foul oppreft, Which more, then Niob's drops, deserves to fill Fountains where passions might be Emblem'd still. When I consider well this Furious Age. Such Hero's Number'd on a Martiall Stage, That for their high descent and Graces spread Times Fatall Annalls larger then yet read. As if our Isle had now profusest been, Ayded by Nature to exalt her Sin. When many best of these alas must find, War, to their Gold of Virtue, too unkind. Little 'twill please the Living Great to know What hapless periods they must undergo. Tho' hard to Destinies accounts to come Where Martiall deeds their broken reck'nings fum; Tallyes, which Providence least Strikes above, That for Fates Bankers would no Chequer prove.

How far Heavens beaming eyes may piercing fee, Yet not divert Mans ragefull Misery, Divines can bolder by their Maxims Teach, Then Reasons Philosophick Aid can reach From the Elaborate Alphabet above, Where Conforants and Vowells wordless move In Stars that Heavens own Algebra Compute, And in their Question work'd must leave some doubt. All which the wife Creator might dispense, To give his Conduct the remoter fence. And like Heavens heightfull distance men allow, Loofeth Mans thoughts that wing'd would thither go. Much I efteem the Soldiers Valiant Art, And in my youthfull years in Field took part Where Mighty Kings and Chiefs did battles guide, Nor did I less then others for my side: Whilft I with grief some Monarchs then beheld Unfortunate, tho' Just their Cause in field. This I observe d before I did Imploy My Soul on thoughts that peacefull blifs enjoy:

And to be nearer Heaven did Improve My fearch of dispensations from above; Where Gentlest Stars did seldom Council call To rescue such themselves expos'd to fall. If not fo shin'd in their Excentrick Course. As more Irregular render'd deeds of Force. T'Inspect which Scheme my disquisition spare, Left my Art tell what you'd unwilling hear. To which Magnanimous Dornland thus reply'd; Most Learned Patron, hard 'twere by you deny'd The Information my Defires implore, And which beyond Mankind you can explore. Yet think not fo I'de prove your fublime Art As thereby caution'd to unfix my heart, Where Bloud I breed that would not Life delay By aid of Stars, if out of Honours way. My Life's too worthless so your Skill to Court: No, tis my Sovereign's most Supreme Import, . Which in this War fuch various progress shows, And other Circumstance my Thoughts propose,

T

In

T

T

That bid me thus address, if Science may Inform my Soul a more propitions way. To which Polyaster gravely this adjoyn'd, Think not fair Son that 'tis to man defin'd The Certain Methods Providence does guide, Whose Ocean flows nor Ebbs like other Tide. When things Emerge they oft abfcond the why They were produc'd from Reasons broadest Eye. How far obscurer then must Mortal's doom Things more abstruce with future Causes come. If Man the Universe cou'd search around, And weigh all Caufes and effects there found, Tho' in that Compass does appear to fight One Total Wonder both in breadth and height: Cou'd he affure how Stars, or things below Come to fubfift as we hehold 'em now. Or how Heaven did the worlds firk Virgin hour Give womb of Time a future Islues power. Whence prying Man as doubtfull might Convey The Worlds first Life as fix its dying day.

Who from this mighty round can't understand More boundless being but at Second-hand. Since nothing to remote perfection flows. As thence Man his Creators effence knows. Whilst all the Miracles which the World do fill. Pose us to search the unknown Founders skill. Thus even the Lowest Tide of Earthly things Often directs us to supremer Springs: Like Rills, through easy Channels feem to Creep. Have Causes that Conceal'd on Mountain's keep. How then shall Man the Gordian-knot unty. That's knit by much fublimer deftiny. Or that way Kingdoms revolutions find, By far obscurer Providence design'd. Yet what this Inquisition wou'd require, (Tho' I could wish declin'd thy strict desire) My Vig'last studies shall as far Impart, As I can pierce with my Acutest Art, And know that I have oft revolv'd with Care The direfull progress of this wicked War,

With fuch Catastrophe's I could convey To Future Time my Hieroglyphick way. On which, 'till now, no eye I did admit To guess that dumb Prophetick figur'd wit. Behold these Scrolls which are in number Three, (Units whence fprings odd Cubick Mystery.) The First I offer English deeds contains, With Sieges, Sallies, Battells fought on Plains. And next in Course this Faithless Irish shows, Steep'd deep in Bloud as here it figur'd flows. The Third Difloyal Scotland represents With their Fallacious Coy'nanted Intents. In all of which thou feeft how many fall, As Honours Catalogue best sums them all. Of these observe selectly such set forth Who most their Nations honour'd in their worth. Of which some Worthies may to thee be known. As here in likeness dead or living shown. If my Art's Prospect duly shall relate Their Story yet referv'd to future date.

And in this Study'd Copy things foresee To no Original yet can liken'd be. With Actions that most signally declare The high Intrigues and Fury of this War. No Strife fo dear shall other Nations cost In Noblest Bloud and Valiant Gentry lost, Which in these Fields, by Fate's regardless powers, Fall but to wither with less precious flowers. More to Impress their Love and Valour's due; See, in what Series here deplor'd do shew The fev'ral Fights and Skirmishes when they Caus'd in their loss their Lovers Mournfull day. As feemingly those espous'd forms appear To drown their Souls and Looks as they weep here. Next these a mournfull Spectacle is seen Of pity'd Virgins, whose soft flame had been Plighted to Warlike Lives and Glories fled, With Joys expected from the Marriage-Bed. (As Mortals lefs their Bleffings prize poffeft, Then fuch by Wishes valu'd are or guest.)

And

And from their liken'd Luftres here do tell. That their Forms could with Grief unfaded dwell. As Lillies when in Rains they Tears do show, Caus'd by rough Storms where their Imooth fea Their Native Beauty doth impairless Stay, Or their last Glory in their dying day. Thus Man with Grief thefe evills must explore That would with full Compassion them deplore: Which in this Martial Landskip here prefent So fadly near and distant Detriment: With Turb lent change and Mischiefs that ensue, As unto fight these dreadfull Visions shew. And whence the meanly born as bad conspire To raise by vile degrees their Orb still higher. Whilft Heaven when pleas'd to joyn Afflictions worst, From Low and Impious fonds their mifchiefs burft. Next, well inspect this face as't here appears, Mark well his Subtle geffures, looks and Tears; And how his Sanguine Nose does him betray, As Bloody Beaks denote the Birds of prey.

Observe

Observe him rising too from low Commands By boldest Stepps, till there he Gen'ral stands. Then Mark his Fawning and his Lips of Zeal, That more divinely he Mens Souls might Steal, Or Crowds feduce who feldom can adjust How unfafe 'tis bad deeds and Prayer to Trust. Then view him here affaulting his Kings ear, With Crocodile drops distill'd to shape a Tear. Next see how he does shift his Janus's Face, And flights supinely offer'd Sovereign Grace. Then forward move thy ove to shadows there. Which in the Artfull Pencills stroaks appear. And tho' thou dost no Visage of them see, Suppose 'em great as English bloud can be. Their Coass of Arms above their heads display'd, Like Guilded fame on refin'd Honour lay'd. Besides a Crown that seems to hang in Air, As if the Head were wanted it shou'd wear. Observe the Figures do this Curtain hold, Which vails these highly Em'nent yet untold.

As if the Destinies, that cann't relent, Conceal'd the Horridness of their Intent. Do they not represent the Furies when the day of the Their dreadfull aspects Joyn with Impious Men; Or in their Snaky Tresses wou'd Invite Some one to Act Hell's boldest Proselite. See how they court this Bloudy Cheif to rife be and Yet more detested unto Humane eyes. O brawing and T And how his armed hand is fretch'd to Seize on b The Crown, thou feeft, in hope of Ayd from these. A Stay thy Inquiry here, for 'tis a Text My Soul's strict Comment has too far perplex'd. Heroick Dornland in whose steady Breast and deliver No apprehensions had so deep Impress'd, As these by Learned Polyaster shown, If Times dark Footsteps were to man Foreknown: Or in fuch Hieroglyphick Shapes expand, When Deaths black Trumps most fill her winning hand. Besides the Figures of Peculiar Friends

Fully describ'd with their Severest ends;

Some stript in Fields, and in that gastly plight Their wounds discern'd through which their Souls took Who Like the Naturall Fall of Humane kinde, (Whose Endless Issue must to Clay be Joyn'd) Embracing Earths smooth Surface Seem'd to Lye, The Eve that Last must Joyn Mortallity. More did his Inward Soul thefe fights Lament, Then outward Grief cou'd Saddest represent. Mov'd from the Tragick Postures by him feen, And objects did as difinall Intervene. Tho' in dark prospects they to him were shown. As Light that dimly breaks through Clouds is known, With many Gallant persons high esteem'd And some, of living freinds, he dearest deem'd, Nor did he well discern where fields feem'd spread Thickest with bodys of the Valiant Dead, Whither the Pencills shaddow might not place With others, there observ'd, his dying Face. Yet all these apprehensions did Convey No fuch remorfe of Death or dying day:

ŀ

As what these figur'd visions might portend, Which by this Artists skill had vayl'd the end, That through this Wars Success and Cruel strife His Soveraigns Cause might ruine with his Life. And caus'd the Loyall Dornland to Confult What from Polyaster's Knowledge would Result. Whom thus he mov'd; Tell me thou Fam'd of Men, How far this Pencill from your Thoughts and Pen Took the Stupendious Methods I behold, And but your Science onely can unfold, Or Taught more haply from your fense to know, Designs our Soveraign Fortunate may show; With Bravest Nobles of this Martiall Isle, And Generous Bloud expos'd to Furious Toyl. Or that prevented which my doubtfull Thought May fear to your deep prospect's sadly brought. To which the Great Polyaster thus reply'd, Think not fair Son the Thread is foon unty'd That Subtle Destinies conspire to Twist, And what more high Guides Causes which they lift.

Of fuch, how Stars incline, Art may declare, Tho? they like Nightly guides to Science are, Confin'd from Beaming the Sublimest Light, Of Providence; Then worlds of Suns more Bright, The first high Author only can display, Tho' pleas'd fometimes to use the darker Ray Of Heavenly Bodies, whence found Art may find Effects disposed but no disposers mind. So far may Humane Calculations reach, Tho' no Coelestiall Text they higher Teach. My Study'd skill perhaps might fo ascend In feeing deeds o're Kings and Men impend: Tho' 'tisa Round no even influence shows, And like the World to Scituation owes Much vari'd Seasons and distemper'd Times, The hot Meridians force or colder Climes. That bolder Men too pronely may admire Why the Creators Conduct did conspire To form a World proves fo unequall Great, Or Temper'd like some headstrong acts of Fate.

Let this thy Further Strict enquiry Stay,

And where Art's helpless think 'tis best to pray.

The Noble Dornland having heard how wise

This Learned Man did things profound disguise,

Allow'd his Modesty no more to ask

By giving Science a severer Task.

Hoping that Powers above might over-Rule

Thoughts that were too Incumbent on his Soul.

Whilst thus from Polyaster he retires,

And far beyond expression him admires.

While Elitin Thurst to the gr

Had to May'r Comit I alvane'd lie in

The

The SIXTH BOOK.

The Argument.

single-rove all his overs arrows I am

Essex by Dream his Fathers Ghost beholds,
By which is told his Future Deeds and End,
Chalgrave Field, and subtile Hampden stain!
Lansdowne sierce Day and Valiant Grensields fall,
Waller on Roundway Hill enforced to run,
Hugon, by Spell from Sorc'res, Faction aids,
Glocester reliev'd and Newberry's Bloudy Fight.

HE Sun past ending Aprils various Hours, (Powers,
Where Stars in Taurus Instuence growing
Had to May's Gemini advanc'd his height,
When Eyes far North behold no Cloudy Night:
As Phabus Beams dissolve Seas frozen there,
And never set for some Months of his Year.
'Till when they rarely see the early Sun,
Or how his shining hours on Dyals run.

But to their homes, their Winter Graves, compell'd. 'Till Night's long Cold by days increase expell'd. An aidfull Providence that helps to Tame Men that in Frozen Climes breed fiercest Flame : Which in our Brittifh Region did appear. As Winter check'd War's speed this Fatal Year. In which, betime the King had Redding loft. And could not that prevent with bloudy Coft. 201 201. From whence the haughty Houses thought to raise Further Atchievements to their Armies Praise Though in their Conduct and their Counfels were Divided Factions moving in each Sphere. Whilst some, from fad effects of Mischiess past, Seem'd less propense to forward others hast Which Sense the Earl, tho' Redding then possessed alice? Found to lie heavy on his troubled Breaft. Who by Success could not fo fwell his Mind. As moderate thoughts no room in him did find. Befides his Soul was more Apal'd to fee The Hand of Heaven his open Enemy.

As in his Camp Contagious * Plague had kill'd Numbers that late his Hardy Legions fill'd. Nor could their Loudest Priests by Prayer obtain, That Heaven should cease th' Infection these had slain. Which much their grieved Gen'ralls Heart opprest, His Army Lesen'd thus and hopes deprest, Of being Improv'd by Soldierly Repute, And Pop'lar Fame which his Soul would promote. These Thoughts, which on his Mind had fix'd their By fleeps foft aid he hoped to abate. Which Night invites, as Natures Time of Cure, When Souls, less easy, waking sense endure. And their Essential Attributes enlarge, As Sleep the bodies Clog does most discharge. Whilft from the boundless working of the Mind, Souls feem in bodies to Live unconfin'd. Now had the Earl Repos'd some hours of Night, As Stars ascending reached their Midnight Height; And Gloomy Meteors, had Condens'd the Air. Whence Forms, some Judge, do Thicker outsides wear;

* A great Plague in the Farliament Army foon after the Surrender of Redding.

Or mode when Sprites their thin extensions Hide, And in contracted shapes their beings guide. Or Ghosts assume, as Frightfull Stories tell. Bodies resembling such in Graves do dwell: Which Fantoms much this Chief afflicted then. Dreaming on Battels past and dying Men: Some War deploring with their Latest breath, Others the quarrel Blam'd at point of Death. Or charg'd their Loss upon his Pop'lar Guilt, That first Allur'd the Bloud was after fpilt. Besides which Vision, to his greatest dread, He dreamt of Graves at Keinton-field of Dead: Which like to Mighty Tombs of Old remain, When Hills of Earth did Cover heaps of Slain. And in Idea next his Soul had fight Of Brandfords day, and Reddings fiercer fight; Doubting lest Angry Ghosts should near him wait To fcare his Soul who caus'd their bodies Fate. At which his Inward Horrors did Arife, Seen by his Mind without her bodies Eyes.

Then fleeping Starts, next fears his fleep to break. Lest his Souls dream should fright him worse awake. As thus he lay perplex'd with various thought. Fancies All-forming Power had Figur'd brought His Fathers Person, much in looks and Meen. And Martiall habit like what his had been. His Beaver pierc'd with shot, as 'twas that time. When he in London form'd his daring Crime; And in his haughty rage and passion Strove To force his Queens Imperiall Power and Love. Which Guilt, as if acknowledg'd e're he spoke, Seem'd on his brow imprest and paler look. And next he utter'd to his Son this Sense; Take from me dead my furest Penitence: Since Fame Stands well confirm'd that Spirits walk, And Organ'd, of this World and t'other, talk. And know I come to bid thee foon decline Th'Ambitious Steps that were too Lofty Mine. When Phaeton like I did attempt to rife, Yet in the offer fell the fcorn of eyes.

Much bloud thou'ff spilt and I had done the fame. Had not the Power of Justice quench'd my Flame. Elfe had Crouds faithfull prov'd, no Armed hand Could have Rule boldier chang'd within this land. As much perhaps thy Pop'lar Soul wou'd do. When Giddy Vulgars shall resist thee too. More Battles thou wilt fight and then refign Thy Power to Factions that Supplanted Thine. Who after Aided by fome Stepdams Art, Shall by quick Poyfon kill thy Stubborn heart. At which he stop'd, and Tears profusely shed. To whom his Son, in Trance, thus thought he faid. O Hapless Father in your Ghost to come, And next your Fate declare how Stars me doom. That from your pure Existence I should find How Sep'rate Souls Paternally are kind. Then Thinks he kneeling did his Bleffing pray, And wish'd that Souls might oftner find their way From deaths recesses, and Teach men to see Their bad deeds past and future misery.

Next Thought he strove t'Imbrace his Fathers knees. Whilst like to Air repress'd his figure flees: Or as the Gloomy Horrors of the Night Vanish with dreams at days approaching Light. Thus he awak'd, and foon revolv'd in thought: The fad concern his flumbers to him brought. With Visions that did dreadfully deterr His further Heightening this destructive War. Which Nourish'd Factions that might soon conspire To lay him Low, and raise their Creatures higher. Whence Peace he wish'd, tho' far remov'd from Men, Might, as the Souls * Afrea, come again. Yet fear'd Heavens wrath was easier to asswage, Then the sterne Houses full determin'd rage. Tho' that rough Medium he refolv'd to Try, As Time gave Calmer opportunity. Till when on other Causes he could lay The Motives did his Martial flame delay.

* Poetically faid to be the Goddess of Piety and Justice.

Mean while the King, that wondrous year of War, Which adds to Fames Heroick Calendar, Had weigh'd maturely in his Prudent mind, What 'gainst his Active Foes was best design'd : Knowing the Voting Houses had decreed, That their Vast Force should yet more daring spread: The North with Mighty Yorkshir's far extent Committed to the Warlike management Of that Lord Fairfax and his Valiant Son, Who, by their Conduct there had gain'd Renown. These how-e're held, in Soul too bravely Just For fuch who then allur'd them to this trust Infusing subtile Notions of a Cause, That well difguis'd feem'd to support the Laws; Strenuously did their Friends and Interest guide T' Oppose within that Sphere the Royall side; 'Gainst whom the brave New-Castle did appear, Gen'rous of mind and resolute in War. Whose high repute did many Hero's raise, That, next his Acts, on Story fix their praise.

But none furpalling his admir'd Ally Heroick a Cavendish, in whose prowess Lye Deeds that Fames wings must as her Trophe's bear, And verse that could his Grandeur full declare. Nor less the Senates party did Imbroil The West of Englands rich and pop'lous soil. For which attempt they Active Waller chofe, A Knight whose Zeal could mighty things propose. And whom their Votes did Celebrate fo high, As he then March'd their Western Excellency. That far as waves there wash the British shore, He might all vanquish by their Haughty power. And was their requisite expedient thought, Since b Greenville, Slanning, had fout Cornish brought. That won at Stratton-field a mighty day, Which Stories with their Future worth display.

Brother to the then Earl of Devonshire.

Who were both Slain as they led their Cornish Countrymen.

The first of whom Sr Bevil Greenville, being kill'd at Lansdown, as is afterwards mention'd in this Poem; and the other Sr Nicholas Slanning, dying of a wound that he receiv'd at the taking of Bristol.

And by their Prince more gratefull understood, but Since this, of his Successes, cost least bloud. Whose Temp'rate Spirit wa like Heaven's design'd, In being to Offending Mortalls kind. Yet hearts so harden'd had his Rugged Foes, That they durft Royal Grace with power oppose: Howe're the discompos'd, or cold delay, Of Timing Effex, wou'd their Fury flay. Whilst powers conjoyn'd from other Camps appear'd, With fuch the Vig'lant Houses had declar'd From his must be detach'd, and by Chiefs led Whom they less doubted then this Peer their head. A And did unto Campaigns near Oxford guide, The well-formed Numbers of their daring Side. Tho' Fame and Rumour us'd their swiftest Wing To speed the bold Allarum to the King. and cor behald With these, a Leader, subtile Hampden jogn'd, Vast in his Parts and deep contriving Mind. Who by his Conduct and his Sword thought fell w To aid the Quarrel Patron'd by his Wit and Hove I would

And more t'Inflame his fierce Affistants then, Did thus express: If with our Armed Men Reason avails, or Maxims that have found Where fast Designs their strong assurance ground; Know these are ours, with Swords that only can Sever Prerogative Bonds Infesting Man. How-e're fuch Gordian Knots Miraculous reach, From Thrones to Subjects, as some vainly teach: Or speciously the Lawyers Brain might find, When Courts the Peoples Purse had theirs design'd. This e're our Senate fate, I first withstood, And held it then a Cause worth English Bloud. Thosnow unsafe at Wrongs redress'd to stop, 'Till furplufage of Power we further Lop. That like the Limbs of some far-spreading Tree, Shaded too long our growing Liberty. Which res'lute force will perfect and defign That do the Foxes part and Lyons joyn. 'Till when the Houses wisely must disown, How Levell they intend to lay the Throne.

13

On which account, this day I welcom here, And full refolv'd with you in Arms appear. Whilst from this Field our hopes improv'd must spring, Where late I prosperous Led against the King The Houses bold Militia, whence first grew, 'Twixt him and us, the Quarrel we purfue. Thus he express'd, like one that cou'd Cajole With powerfull words the Soldiers daring Soul. This Speech scarce ended Rupert did appear, With Troups well Formed to joyn fierce Battel there: Swift, as the Trumpet's found, his Prowels led, And in that hafte faw scatter'd Foes lie dead. The Orange Scarft, the cognizance made then Of Refolute Effex and his Fighting Men, Were in their Gawdy Habits forc'd to run, And turn their Tawny backs against the Sun. Wishing that Parthian-like they now could fly, And by back-shooting kill their Enemy.

M 3

Which

* Chalgrave-Field where Mr John Hampden was first said to be in Arms for the Parliament by raising the Militia in order to suppress the King's Commission of Array, and in that Field afterwards received his Deaths wound.

Which Stratagem to Rome's bold Legions brought Difasters as that People flying fought. But how should these act any Conducts Part, When headlong Fear had first surprized their Heart: And close pursu'd, as all must needs agree, Where Rupert's Valour forc'd his Victory. And thus confus'd unto their Camp they stray, Where Effex, hoping better Tidings, lay. Hampden, amongst the rest, the Field had left, By deadly wounds almost of Life bereft. Few days him end, whilst much his Party griev'd That Pate, of fuch a Grandee, them bereav'd: Lest from Death's hast they but in Embrio find The change of State which his ftrong Brain defign'd; Or left unmodell'd by deceased * Pym, Who fubt'ly to their Caufe Intrigu'd effeem. Tho' by a homlier Fate the latter fell. Whom Lice by Legions slew as many tell, * The Loufie Disease, of which he was reported, about that time to dye of.

S

So Hered full of Pop'lar Vogue and Pride, Attacqu'd by these most vulgar Vermin dy'd. Rupert, successfull thus in this Campagne, Where Foes thought Fame by Cavalry to gain, Which on their fide more numerous did confift, Had they been Soul'd as boldly to refift: Such dread diffus'd through all their mounted Force, As long they fear'd to fight fuch Loyal Horse. And did in Effex Soul improve delay, Caus'd by difguft and Fortune of that day. Which gave the King apt Leisure to dispose Embody'd Powers against his Western Foes: Whom Active Waller had combin'd with care, More Pop'lar now then Effex in this War. The Noble Hertford, fit for Royal Truft, And Int'rested in those parts to Adjust His Sovereign's Cause, did from an Honest Fame Deferve, by him unfought, a Gen'rals Name. Little he had of Wars experience known, and therefore did refuse to guide alone.

T'AGB

ontrie?

T'assist whose conduct by the King was chose His Newphew Maurice Daring unto Foes: Great Rupert's Brother, which enough does tell How like to him his Prowess did excell. Greenville, to whom brave * Hopton did withdraw, When first Rebellion had Infring'd the Law, Worthy of Lineage and conspicuous known For Gen'rous deeds that Cornish hearts had won; And bloud best valu'd in that fertile Soyl, Who Gladly joyn'd with his, their Warlike Toyl: And had with high repute fout Numbers rais'd To add to those at Stratton-field were prais'd. Their Countrey clear'd from Foes, they next prepare For their Kings Cause in distant climes to War. And with due sense of Hopton's Merit, gave Confent that he Supreme Command should have.

* Who in the breaking out of the Rebellion, being forc'd from his Habitation in Somersetshire, Retir'd for his Safety privately into Cornwall, where he was not only worthily received by the Chief of that Country, but as they Arm'd for the King entrusted to Command them.

Since he, from home remov'd, had for them fought, And by his Conduct prov'd Advantage brought. Soon did their Monarch's Summons them direct Where they by Hereford Maurice should be met: And with their conjoyn'd power of Foot and Horse Oppose th' Impetuous growth of Wallers Force. Near Chard, a Ville of Fertile Somerfashire, Their joyfull Juncture was, and eccho'd there. So when kind Areams in one Joynt Current flow, Their Waves embrace and founds of Gladness sho The Royal Power by Infantry Improv d Of Gallant Cornish, in bold Order Mov'd Unto Campaigns the Enemy to Find, Who then on Lansdown-top his Camp delign'd. Uneven Ridges do that Hill Surround, By Waller chose for his Advantage ground. Th' Assent and Avenu's, with care Possest By Files and Squadrons he reputed best. Whilst Posted thus some Troups he does Imploy To Skirmish so as they might Foes decoy:

Bidding that they when charg'd should foon retreat, And Tempt purfuers on to their defeat. Assuring them that on the Royal side Were Chiefs whose Courage Dangers so defy'd As sometimes in pursuit of Glory they Had fcorn'd in fear of Stratagem to ftay. The Zealous Hafterig, on Walters part, Does first attempt to prove his Warlike Art. Arm'd Cap-a-Pe his Militants appear'd, Who'd think they shock of Foes or Guns had fear'd; Or that their Iron shapes should not endure The Charge of fuch whose Breasts were less secure. Since for them better then the Royal Side Fortune did Wars Accoutrements provide. But howe're Fenc'd, their Bulks less hard they find Then Bosoms that Inclos'd the harder Mind. And thus the Royal Cavalry that day Through Armed Squadron's did enforce their way: Whose Foes confus'd, with a precipitant haste, In fpight of Orders given, retir'd too fast.

5

So hard it is in Wars Exploits to find But e're their Squadrons were to O Mens practiques to their Theories adjoyn'd. The Royal Chiefs perceiving that the Foe Withdrew with loss and in disorder too; Judg'd that occasion, Fortune's usefull Guide, Would add Atchievements to their Gallant fide; But left they should obstructed find their way. Where opposite Files in Pass or Ambush lay: Fame does, from Verice The Cornish Foot, with Greenville at their head, Appropriate to the Murn And * Chiefs whose Deeds in Fames Records are read, Did in despite of disadvantage Ground Repell their Foes, where Posted they were found. Who upward unto Wallers Camp withdrew, Like Deer that to their Herd from Hunters flew, Their Stout Pursuers after them ascend, And on the Hill Embattell'd boldly stand. The Royal Horse, the Avenu's now clear'd, To Second Cornish Gallantry appear'd.

* This General mention, intended to include all such Persons as are most Conspicuous in Story, is in this and other places of this Poem so to be understood that Prolixity may be avoided in repeating of proper Names.

But e're their Squadrons were to Order brought. Their Van had Wallers Force fuccessless fought. Here Valiant a Loer left a Crimson floud, And many with him flain of English Bloud. Besides such Numbers that from Death or Wound. In Wars Memoirs Conspicuoully are found. But Youthfull b Dencourt for whose Noble fall Fame does, from Verse, peculiar value call; Appropriate to the Manner of his End. Which Truth does in these Measures recommend. Wrapt in the Enemies Colours dead he lay, That he won for his Winding-Sheet that day: Ho Heroe could in Bed of Honour dye Trophy'd more Glorious by Wars destiny. The Fight renew'd, each fide by Prowefs Try To force their front Embody'd Enemy.

a Sir George Loer, a Gallant Gentleman, then Major to the Regiment of Col. Thomas Howard, fince Earl of Berks, Slain in this Battle.

b That the Lord Dencourt was found Dead as is here describ'd is known from History.

Nor would they Leifure to their Guns afford, More forward to destroy with Pike and Sword. Waller who this Campaign had first Possest, Some Forces fo dispos'd to Aid the rest, As what from fight or order could accrew, He judg'd was fully his advantage now. The Cornish Infantry that long had stood, And would no Foot withdraw to fave their bloud; His best reserves their Legions next Assail, And 'gainst their Valour something too prevail. Greenville disdaining this, an Ensign takes, And fixing it in Earth by it he makes His dauntless stand, resolving there to dye; Or Live approv'd for fignal Loyalty. Whilst Fame to give his Death a lasting date Perpetuates his * Glory in his Fate. Whose Trusty Militants when they beheld Their Lov'd Chiefs fall, Fury revenge compell'd:

Untill

* By which is intimated both the Heroick end of this Gallant I rson, and the Noble Title of Baron of Lansdown given to his Posterity by King Charles the Second.

Untill his Death retaliated by Blows, And the ground strowed with Carcalles of Foes Pitty that vulgar Gallantrys should be So sparingly conveyed by History. As but their General mention does appear. Instead of single Rooms of Glory there. Whilft Partial Birth, Monopolizing Fame. Contracts Man's value to the highest Name; Leaving the Low, howe're by Nature Brave. To go without Encomium to their Grave. Thus War, the mean destroy'd, in heaps conceals. And but their fudden ends, like Plague, reveals. Till fetting Sun both fides prolong'd their fight. Tho' Wallers, as appear'd, first wish'd for Night, Who to be fafe the next fucceeding day, The Time of darkness chose to March away. And as in hafte, some Thought, had left behind Huge Loads of Powder: whether fo delign'd By Craft or Fate, few Tellers rightly know; Or from what cause did Burst that Fatall blow.

Sooner then Moment did the Flame arife." And feem'd to pierce with pointed fire the Skies. Like a vast Pyramid its Bottom spread. And left within that Compass many dead. Which Sulphurous force transform'd their Persons fo. As they did Blacker dye then Ethiops flow. Some Blafted liv'd in Bulks to wonder swell'd. And with a fad Amazement were beheld. Others furviv'd, tho' Maim'd in every part: Who'd not for their fakes curse the wicked Art That first these seeds of Mischief had design'd For a destructive fewell to Mankind. By this fierce Blow in this difastrous Night, Hopton had Perish'd too or Lost his fight: Had not Heavens Aid the Powders force with-held, The' fcorch'd his Visage and his Limbs beheld. Which Griefs with Magnitude of Mind he Bore, Till Time his Pristine Strength did full restore. This dire Mischance with other Motives gave Occasion to the Royalists to Leave

That fatal furface, and their march intend Where due refreshments might their Toyls befriend. Tward the * Devises they affign'd their way, When Wallen who had fear'd their longer stay, Affum'd new hopes, from Artifice or Fate. To vanquish them whom late he could not Beat. Close to their Rear, as Stars reach'd Midnight height, His Van he led the next enfuing Night: Judging that they, who had few hours before Repuls'd at Lansdowne-field his stoutest power, Would least suspect that he did then pursue Their Marching Force from which his Lately flew. Whilst to conceal what by design he meant, By Trumpets found his Martial Complement He first to Noble Hertford does convey, Since he as General had precedent fway: Next lets him know that if his Arms could bring The spacious West subjected to the King:

10 T

* A Large Borrough-Town in the Middle of Wiltshire.

(177)

E're Sun did fet he would that Value Stake, In . Cherfton Fields if there he'd Battle make. The Earl to this with Modesty, reply'd, That he by Challenge ne're had him defy'd: Wherefore he wonder'd that in Waller's name, So Bravo like, this b meffage to him came. Hopton, Which in few moments flavior ly he fone With whom the Earl this Errand did debate, and bon Tho' full of Malade from preceding fate, With clear Perception unto him declar'd That Guile should more then Swords of Foes be fear'd; Since War by wicked Maxim did allow, my vali as and That Praud Conductress might to Valour go: Befides all which impossible 'twould be, Should, to this proffer, his refolvs agree; A Lordship that did belong to the Earl and therefore speciously Nominated by Waller, the better to disguise his intended design.

st'ayroll

lown, too firait to vic

b By the Author of this Poem Personally observ'd, he being in Arms all the time of that Western Expedition.

To move with weari'd Foot a tedious way, And Battle give in compais of one day. This mellage Answer'd and they Marching on, Th' Infidious part of Waller foon was known : Who that they might not think his Army near, This Errand sent e're he Attacqu'd their Rear: Hopton Which in few moments furiously he fought, And by a fierce furprize diforder brought Unto some Bodies on the Royall Part, Till better form'd they Stood his force and Art. Nor could they March unto the Post defign'd, But as they moving fought their Foe behind: And thus retreating they continu'd Fight, Till to Devises come by Evening Light. Soon as Arrivod a Martial Court they held, Compos'd of fuch that for Conduct excell'd: Debating how their Powers might there sublist, And orderly the Enemy relift. Whilst now in Crowds their Horse and Foot possest The Town, too strait to yield them food or rest: Howe're

Howe're by fight and March they Haras'd show, And were belides in Ammunion lowid to liguous oanly Which to repair and to detatch more Force, Determin'd 'twas that all their firength of Horse Should from the Town that Night make their retreat. Till Reinforcements they from Oxford meet. Hertford and Maurice with them march'd away. When Hopton and fuch Chiefs behind did flay Whose Conduct best the Infantry could Guide, And by example Animate their fide. Which, tho' alone, by Duplicate renown, Refolv'd to Conquer Foes and keep the Town. And had for feveral days Successfull fought, Till want of powder to diffress them brought: Which known to Waller foon his Stars he Bleft, That thus Advantag'd him to win the West, And Noblest Enemies his Captives fee Whence he'd Triumph by Parliament decree. This Exigent as Royalists deplor'd, And fruitlefsly had fearth'd for Powder for'd,

A Trusty * Townsman makes himself their Guide Unto enough of his to aid their fide. Provided thus, with bold Joy they defy By Peals of Shot the daring Enemy: And with recruited Fury Sallies make, Where Posted Foes they kill and Pris'ners take. Scorning that Works their Valour should Confine, Who durft the Place defend without a Line. Waller who hop'd that some Impending strait Would have inforc'd his Opposits to Treat, That he the Town by render might obtain: Now doubts he Trophies there defign'd in vain. When unto him his trufty Scouts declares That Bodies ofrecruited Foes were near. By Princely Maurice and Brave Wilmot led : From whose Vancurriers they had swiftly fled. Th'Allarum taken, he withdraws his Force, Except some Parties of his Foot and Horse, * One Pierce an Inhabitant of the Devises, who discover'd to the Lord Hopton where for some time he had hidden Powder.

Defign'd to Skirmish and amuze the Town, Left there too foon 'twere known that he was gone. Few Miles he march'd 'till to a Hill he came, Whose Downy Surface men do * Round-way name, Where speedily, as Order could admit, He did for Fight his ftrong Battalions fit. Rejoyc'd to fee with what an eager Courfe His Foesarriv'd, tho' but Impowr'd by Horse. Concluding that his Cavalry and Foot, By joynt Advantage would their Bodies rout. Whilft Maurice, Wilmot fo their Troups dispose, As by their Conduct first they come to Blows: And Ranks disperse that would refult their way, Till Flight they forc'd as their Swords numbers flay. Fiery Sir * Arthur, who, on Zeals account, Had thought all other Horoes to furmount:

* Call'd from the Village Adjacent Round-way-Hill or Down, but fince by way of Joque call'd Run-away-Hill, Alluding to the confused flight of the Rebels there,

* Hazelrig a Zealeus Republican.

My Muse does for a Tear-Heroique call.

He that had rais'd Example to the height

Bydeeds that Generous Loyalty compleat:

Unhappy 'twas that his brave end should be

No stop unto his Nations Misery.

Or that the Crisis of his Life's last hour

Should imply Fate unto his Sovereigns power.

Which his Kings Lips Prophetickly declar'd:

And from Polyasters Science had been fear'd.

But now as if the Destinies revers'd

Events, which some Prognosticks had rehears'd:

By the King's Power was op'lent, Briftol won,

And round frong Gloceffer next his Leagure known.

Tho' much admired by discerning Men,

Why that Town's Siege was undertaken then:

When Rumour had on London fear Imprest

From Waller beaten and fubdu'd the West;

* The reason for Introducing this Character is so fully given before in the Third Book, as it needs not be here repeated.

The Factious Senate too divided theme. And did their Cause and Person's safety fear. Their Party wav ring or inclin'd to yield, Instead of raising numbers for the Field. Effex demurring, and his Army weak, And no March, if recruited, car'd to take. 'Till Glocesters bold Defence their Courage rais'd. And * Massey her Defender loudly prais'd. Unhappy Prince whom Stars had thither brought, That by no future Aid repair'd the fault. So Hannibal before Tarentum stav'd. And loft Romes Conquest by time there delay'd. Nor was then Glocester's bold defence alone The King's Misfortune but Hull's stronger Town. Before which Brave Newcastle then did lie Besieger by one Fatal Destiny.

* By whole Conduct Glocester was preserv'd, tho' afterwards he had cause to repent it being persecuted by his own Party for not complying with their Antimonarchical Designs if not suspected to have remorse of Conscience for opposing of his Sovereign.

His Number great and the vast Northern Clime No less then Western vanquished at that time. And but his Enemies worsted Reliques left To man this place of other Aid bereft: As then Lord Fairfax and his Valiant Son For their last refuge fled unto this Town: By Nature strong and fortify'd by Wall, That feem'd for Scaling-Ladders, built too tall. Fam'd Troy, though Nepsune's Fabrick faid to be, Not like to Hull did find support from Sea. Where through vast Sluces Humbers Waves m And the Adjacent parts to distance drown. So strongly did rough Neptune's Trident here Against King Charles his Scepter Leavy War. Whilst the Renown'd Newcastle soon beheld (orewhelm'd. His Trenches, Bullwarks, Tents, with Streams Untill his Camp, thus made a watry Lake, He did, with loss of Men and Time forfake. Which Suffrance wither'd his fam'd Army's Flower. And former Conquests gain'd by Warlike Power.

Who else Victorious might have Eastward gone, And, with his Sovereign joyn'd, have London won. When Stars from Fate's Similitude decreed, That both at hapless Leaguers should be stay'd. But what the Counsels of that Time alledge For undertaking Hull and Glocesters Siege: My Muse no Descants here presumes to make, Since from Event appears their groß millake, Which gave to London's Senate wish'd-for scope, From their Difasters to erect their Hope. Not doubting but, from them diffus'd, 'twould bring Increase of Fury to Oppose their King. Tho' they perceiv'd, amongst the Crowds of Men, The Fervor of the most abated then: Wearied by War, or dubious whether Right Stood on that part which them allur'd to Fight. When * Hugon did to Vulgar Minds apply His Tempting Zeal and strenuous Industry.

H

Fr

Bu

* By whose Character I suppose the Reader may judge that the Infamous Hugh Peter, who may not be improperly termed the most Artificial Canter of that time's Pulpit-Traytors was Intended; & he has the Authors consent so to understand this Nominal.

Hugon, who in this Story room must find an and had From Comick part and Tragick badly Joyn'd Whose Artifice could men to Fight dispose But Laugh'd at all that dy'd in Field by Blows in oT No Levite call'd, the off in Pulpits known bestimbA Where Don-Quixgt he play'd without a Gown will With Patriots of that Time in high effeem and as but And ruling Females Amorous of them 1 25 W 3 V 12 / 2il But how his Genius to this height arofeol lidy 2 se yous My Muse by this ensuing Wonder shows and initial And as that a Witch on Purion Begot de vomen as ban Came from New-England to aid Men of Plot Comely in Figure, tho' few Stories tell That Dames of Magick did in Form excell Torro of T As if that Very Photo's Lips to Pite, woods woods By Course Amours attracted his delight. Demure in Speech and Gesture was her Mene. And on her drefs a Milkwhite Vaile was feen-At distance Zealots did her Beams admire, When told that the could Love and Cant Inspire

And

And when the Sorc'ress would the Harlot play, On him the doted that could Faithless pray. Near London Suburbs was her then abode. To whom by fearch had Hugon found the Road. Admitted to her close Apartment there, Her Beauty he adjudged above compare : And, as 'tis thought, Charm'd by her taking fight, His Nerve was rifen above usual height. Bufy as Sybil foon he her perceives, Inscribing Scripture Texts on diverse Leafs. And as she mov'd her wan and words did speak, Around her head a trembling flight they take : And when descended on her Table find The Order which for them she first design'd. Wonder, above what Sybils Leafs could shew, If this on Fame's account be granted true. Not many words this admir'd Charmer us'd, Till kissing him she Love and Zeal infus'd: Letting him know that she'd improve his Sense, By bold Intrigues and Pulpit Impudence:

Since

Since well she knew his Soul did little care Tho' retrograde to Heaven he vented Prayer. Then takes a Leaf on which a Text was wrote. On purpose Charm'd his Faction to promote: And with a tickling whisper next infus'd The Spiritual Gibberish by him after us'd. Which on his Knees'tis faid he did receive. To shew th'Adorement he th'Enchantress gave. His Conge taken, the ensuing day He broach'd in Pulpit a new Canting way. Which being Inspired by the Devil's Wit, Some Infides did of Men and Women fit. Whence fervent Matrons foon for fight defign'd Their Husbands, whilst to Whore they stay'd behind. Nor did the Virgins, with a Blush that Time, Present their Gifts to aid the Publique Crime. Who with a shameless Confidence declaim'd Against all such from War would be reclaim'd. This Female Vogue, and Moneys lov'd Command, Soon did incite the Soldiers Armed hand,

And London Legions to the rest adjoyn'd and low some As Effex them for Glocefters Aid delign de Who now his hope, tho lately droop does raife, I Of Meriting by Conduct renewed Praise. Dogum no Skippon, he Led, with Chiefs of bold Import, Rounded by Guns, that like a moving Fort His Army did in wide Campagnes appear, And Fruitless Charged by * Rupert when met there. of Too ftrong for Let, the Earl still forward goes. 'Till Glocesters Joy his bold Arrival shows. The King when thus approached his Foes he faw. By Night, does from that Town, his Force withdraw? Fatal that Night, as Elements did flow By Thunder, Storms, and Winds that loudest blow. This grand Relief effected by this Peer, Return to London next imployed his Care. And how his Warlike Caution might contrive That he might thither without Fight arrive.

* By which is Intimated the Attacque that was given by the Kings Cavalry, Commanded by Prince Rupert, to my Lord of Effex his Army marching to relieve Glocester near Stow an open Part of that Countrey.

Left other Actions mould his Fame impair, E're he received, for this, Applaules there and mondy When Stars decreed, that for a Bloody Day, and it is He should in Newberry's Field his Files Array a non W Where overtaken by the Royal Power, while roll Both fides engaged as role the Morning hour, agent o'T Profufely Bloud was foon on each part hed, anidgio V? No Verfe can here enough lament the Deads istmoil Mongst whom Canarvan, Valour's Chory, Tell sloss ac And Faukland by the Mules Loved to well smiliterit in Obliging Sunderland here also flain um sed I lied lated O What Field like this from Noble Blond bears Ston? The Earl, amongst his Dead forme Brave had loft, and W Tho' this Advantage much his fide could boat is Total That they with cheaper Mettal had fupple d byb 10 Their Cause, 'gainft which oppos'd the Noblet dy W. So few of their High Station then were known That would in Field the Houses Quarrel own. Never more pois'd was Battel by Event, Or Armies known more hours of day had spent

With equal Prowefs, fo hard 'tis to know. When English Valours Fight, which bravest do. Both sides in Warlike form appear'd next day. When Effex first withdrew and march'd his way. Nor did the Roy lifts hold it prudent then To tempt him, in Retreat, to fight again. Weighing the Order in which he withdrew, Themselves o'retoyl'd with March and fighting too. On each part yielded that they could no more At that time Combate as they did before. O Fatal Soil that must next year contain A Second Battel, and more English slain, Where Effex did his rallied Enfigns lead: Better that he o're furthest Seas had fled, Or dy'd by Shipwrack on the Cornish Shore, When Treaty fav'd his there * deferted Power:

Then

A very Important Remark, the Earl having left his Army in a Strait in Cornwall he took Shipping for London and left Skippon behind him to Treat for the Army of which the Infantry had Terms leaving Arms behind them, their Horse having broken through one Wing of the Kings Army: These very men fought resolutely, above others, soon after at the Second Newberry Fight as is intimated here, and in Fight were heard to express their desire to revenge the Kings success in Cornwall.

Then with bold Legions, fo repriev'd, difplay Rebellions fury here another day. Yet this Last Battle, Tho' uncurb'd his Sword, No Future Trophy did to him afford: Or Lessen the Disgust that was exprest Against his Late Misfortune in the West. Whence the Imperious Houses did decree That he, their wars first Guide, remov'd should be. And other Conduct chosen to Enhance Deeds, which they Judg'd he flowly did Advance; Howe're his Faction did with theirs Comply, In being their Soveraign's Common Enemy. But how Intrigu'd their Parties and Defigns, Would tedious render this brief Poems Lines: Wherefore we must from Passages descend, And that may give our Story closer end.

Tree with bold Legions, for certar

The SEVENTH BOOK.

The Argument.

The Houses their new Modell'd Army raise,
And Fairfax, tho' but Knight, their General made.
Cromwells bold rise and Counsells verse relates.
Direfull Events the Nation apprehends.
Low's passion and concern with War Intrigue.
The King by Furious Storm does Leicest r win.
Fairfax to Oxford does his Army Guide: 100 wold Which Action the Kings Northern March diverts.

That Fairfax should their Captain Generall be.

Not mean his Birth, of Disposition sit.

To be subservient to their ruling Wit.

A Complysance they did believe Improv'd,

As they had the more haughty Earl remov'd.

By Martiall deeds this Knight had gain'd renown,

And for the Houses was Successfull known.

Implicitely

Implicitly he could their rule Obey, Which most Endear'd them to his Fighting way. Whose Brain more with the Soldiers part conspir'd Then Ends by which to Factions Men Aspir'd. Or how Presbîtery's Interest was wain'd, As Independency Improvement Gain'd Both in the Houses and the Armys Sense, Who did their high Careffes then dispense Unto aspiring Cromwells growing Name, The darling Leader of Fanatique Flame. Poor had he Liv'd, altho' Gentilely born, His Interest despicable and forlorn: Whilst his Life past, to Shame had vitrous bin, Till he, by Covert Zeal, Transform'd his Sin. And now 'tho but Lieutenant-Generall made, By craft was more than Fairfax foon obey'd. And had this new form'd Army fo Cajol'd, As all therein feem'd for his purpose Soul'd. Thus was the Man, and thus his figure rose, Above what story most Prodigious shows.

But how he made progression to this height The Mediums tell, which briefly we'l recite. Effex discarded by that Factions Power, Of which then Cromwell was esteem'd the Flower, This Subtle Man to Grandees next propos'd How Martiall Force might furer be compos'd: If from their Numbers they'd Scelectly take Men that by zeal their valours fiercer make: And with them, fo devoted, Legions fill, Prepar'd by Conscience for their fakes to kill. Declaring how Perswasion hardens fight, And how men Motiv'd fo, all perills flight: Tho' States Subverted are or Thrones remov'd, The Action feems to them by Heaven approv'd: Who deem it Sublime Glory to destroy Prophaner Rule which Mortalls would enjoy. Nor feazibly will this our war proceed, If Harden'd conscience does not formost Lead. Each man is more then man whom that Inspires; The Spirituall Gideons which no money hires.

T

And tells how fruitlessly we conquest fought As men for us of hireling Genius fought. Who but for Muster pay to Fields make hast, And would Wars hours in Plenteous quarters waste. The Armed Drones that Nationall Treasure spend, Without a sting of Spirit to Contend: Let Votes, Instead of them, Bold Godly chuse To Fight our Battells, and our Cause espouse. Nor think that Militants, with fofter Flame, Can the Fierce Honour of the Kings fide Tame. This zealots Speech, like Tinder's catching fire, Did with the Houses fervent votes conspire: Which by a * felf-deniall Nam'd decree Ordain'd their Army should new modell'd be : . O're which, tho' Fairfax Generall we finde, His Power to Crampell ward-like was defign'd.

* Their self-denying Ordinance so call'd, because it allow'd no person of either House to have Military Command, the purposely form'd to lay aside the Earl of Bdex and some others under him: notwithstanding which Cromwell was so favour'd as by particular dispensation to serve under Fairfax.

The Knight but factions Nominal allowed, Whilft Cromwell role the Phanix of their Crowd. Fatall Conjunction, as their Actions Tell, That direfull on their King and Nation fell. But how their Crimes arriv'd unto that height, Our forrowfull Measures will in Course recite. Well did the Commons House Approve the Choice Of this new Modell and in hope rejoyce Events they judg'd from fuch a Power would Ipring, That they held keenest form'd against the King. And tho' in t'other House, the litting Peers Had long concurr'd with Voting Commoners: And had to Lapse of Honour vilely been, Abetters of this Wars designed Sin; Yet in this Juncture had this Act withstood, From sense perhaps of their Neglected Bloud, By which the Furious Commons did require The Knight's Advancement and his Hardy Squire. Howe're unto their Effex thought difgrace, And Peerage then deny'd a Generalls Place.

Thus did Inferiour Votes the Higher Sway, As Lords did Commons, in effect, Obey. And now this Novell Army does prepare To raise their Faction by Succeeding war. For whose Success, were many prayers said, By fuch as held themselves most Sanctify'd. Tho' Prayers, hopes, wishes, had their different Crime, As London's Juncto vary'd at that time: Where for disbanded Effex's party's fake, The Presbyterians high difgust did Take. And from Regret could Inwardly Scarce pray For Independents on their fighting day. Lest that fierce Party, on a Martiall Score, Shou'd end what Trother Left undone before. Whilst highly Fairfax and his Cheifs Carefs Their Souldiers to attain by Arms Success. And with Bold confidence their March design'd Where efer they might the Royall Army find. When rumours from this Movement every where Bufy'd the thinking Heart and watchfull ear:

As men did Problems and conclusions draw From what they heard, or Judg'd their Souls forefaw. Whence various Expectations fill'd the Minde As to the King or Houses they Inclin'd. Or did their forward Emulations guide By Gallantries observ'd on either side. Nor did some Beauteous of their Sex decline Glory, which love to Valour could Assigne: If not by Speech their Rivaldries declare, As they did Hero's Martial Acts compare. When in Flavira's Character and Deds Was passion found that womans's Soul exceeds. Brave Lyle she Lov'd, as is declar'd before, And thought it Heroine valour to explore His Fame in war, the Jewell of her heart. Like which she Judg'd no Hero's valiant part. To whom a visit Rosaline now makes, Of whose bright figure verse precedent speaks, Pensive in Minde as the for Lucas sake, Did prospect of wars fatall dangers take,

A

And thought the did that Inftant him behold Leading his Troops too desperatly bold, And how his wounded Horfe did three times bound, And threw him off as it fell dead to ground. Wishing that, from such chance, Flavira might Less prompt her Lovers Soul to dangerous fight. And now Flavira as if she perceiv'd The Sentiments that Rosaline had griev'd: By complyfance and Generall converse, From what Fame did in Town or Court disperse. A while directs he Language and her mene, And feem'd without Caprice a Lover then: Or that she had on Glory folely Layd The Pride of Passion which her Soul obey'd. Reflecting on the Exigent of Times, And how Improv'd by mens degenerate Crimes: From which Mean Source the Chills, to valour spring, As fome relentingly affift their King. Tender perhaps as Ladies please to Fear, That would their Hero's Softer Toyls endear:

And think 'tis Glorious if their choicer Beams Do from Campaignes with-hold their Lovers flames. Know Rosaline, says she, Flavira shall Never, her Lovers honour, fo Enthrall. Let it her Emulation rather be, To heighten others by his Gallantry. What verse can tell how Rosaline was movid, When these words heard, whose Soul more calmly Lov'd. Pos'd, as she would her apt return now fit Unto Flavira's speech, and sprightly wit; And could not but with troubled minde explain Her Sense which in these words did utterance gain. Highly your valour Madam is Confest By my hearts deference to what yours exprest: Whereby your Admir'd Loyallty appears Unto our Soveraign, whom my Soul revers. Nor shall e're my Affection Arm withdraw That can in Field his Rebell Subjects Aw. Begging of Heaven that Titulary Stars May Loyall Lives defend throughout these Wars.

And

And that the Jewell Life which Love would fave, May not from Bloudy power a Period have, Little this Speech did with Floors weigh and work had Whose eye was then removing to Survey A painted Story, where the Peneille Art wolf Alling Did her Great Hero's deeds to Life Impart. 10 10 And where with proud delight the did behold Fields, in which Lyle renownedly was bold. And how, before him, that had Numbers Hain, As his Files vanquiffed, or did post maintain. Inspecting next how in last Weathery Fight. His valour did Amaze beholders fight: When to Encourage Soldiers not to Fear. He did their Leader in his * Shirt appear. Which Posture fo Flavora's Passion pleas'd. As her foft Arms his Picture's form embrac'd: Next kiss'd his Lips, and to the Pencills Grace, Admired the figure of his Valiant Face.

* This manner of Gallantry in Lyle, as a brave Incouragement to Militants, whom he commanded at the fight above mention'd, was observ'd by many, and lest it should not have an Honourable Record from History is here mention'd.

When Rosaline did from this action finde The high Transport that rul'd Flavira's Minde: And how she from Excess of Spirit gave Encomiums by comparing of the Brave: Whilst Jealous Honour might in others raise Excess of Daring to gain Womans Praise; She from Flavira with a modest Grace Retir'd, and pitying Lovers wept apace. Fame's watchfull Tongue not only from this Scene. But what before Flavira's words had been, Promulg'd to Martialists that Womans heart Encited Emulation on their Part. Whence fome of either Sex did make their claim To Love and Honour by a Rivall'd Fame. Or did, with Animosity, Contest, As they affected or Judg'd actions best. This known to Lucas, in whose Gallant mind Desert and Glory did their Center find: Above all Boaft, the varnish of the Proud, Or Men whose Tongues, to Fames deceit, are Lowd,

As

Or

Y

H

C

As Surreptitionfly they'd fix renown On deeds, they would be fancy'd to have done. Yet from prevailing Sense of Honour thought, Himself disparag'd if to Ballance brought With any, to the Van of Fame had rofe, Or to him were compar'd in fighting Foes. one named And as a Lover lov'd the praises too, 10 shall ain I Which Heroine Beauty Valour did allow. It designed These thoughts had giv'n some trouble to his break, When Lyle, on Wars concern, to him addreft: Nor had he his Lov'd person till that Hour Beheld, fince his return from Marston-Moor; Where Lucas did to wonder fight maintain, And of successfull Foes had many flain. Vel au of fland A Bloody Victory and deplor dly great, allede H out Since that * day Dates the King's first grand defeat; The Northern Counties wholly loft thereby, And Num'rous Lives renown'd for Loyalty.

* In which as some write were kill'd on both sides Nine Thoufand Men.

As foon as Lyle beheld brave Lucas Face, With hafty kindness he did him embrace; Wishing that if in War, by Heavens decree, Their Lives must have a Fatal destiny: That one days Bloudy Period both might end, And in one Grave be bury'd friend by friend. This sense of Lyl's so generously kind, Impress'd fuch passion on the others Mind That his Soul yields a noble Tear to shed E're for reply he these words to him faid. Highly thy kindness Valiant Lyle Lown and and had now And the remarks of Honour by it shown, Nor do I doubt but that some future Field, Shall to us Joyntly Crops of Glory yield. Tho' Rebells did at Marfton-Moor facceed, Where Loyal valours did profusely bleed: Of whom perhaps some Ghosts less quiet rest As they discern Mens former worth deprest: Or by Capricious Fame Misunderstood The value of their deeds and Warlike bloud;

T

As Tongues of Envy the to Camps does fend H vill That to Impede Man's Glory there contend : Well a Or unto Pickes dispose the Martial Breast, daises and As Actions by Compare are deemed best. and I A way, forme Ladies for Loves Take rejoyce; When they to valour give their dasting woice will These words and what their Bendency might mean. Seem'd to prepare Tome unexpected Scene. It smo? Well known to Lyle the high diffcult of Spirit and no That Lucas had to descants on his Merit! visible de Or any fond Perceptions that Implyed, froms b wood Tho' by a friend, his valour equalized. It even had Whence Lyle was forry that Floring Mind grins Was, for her Lovers fake, too Boat undinid and all And now he bends diffcounter anothers ray of to list to To Wars defigns, and Battels future day : O ried ? Telling they foon must Endmiss appose, and mell a By Fairfax, Cromwell, Lead, their active Foes: Who for fierce Wars increase in Soul conspire, Like fewell added to fome foreading fire,

May Heavens decree all dire presage restrain. As Royal Powers their Cause in fields Maintain: Let their bold Chiefs their private Grudges flight, That Stars may aid their Union as they fight. No matter if Fond Tongues Incline to Scan The Marthal Deeds of this or t'other Man: Or from peculiar favour would prefer Some they admire to Fame's first Room in War: An Emulation that should least Infest The steady Temper of the valiant Breast. Know dearest friend, that Lucas does concede And Love the rule by which thy Soul is led. Granting with you that valours noble part, In spight of tongues, resideth in the heart: Yet the' there feated, still the Bravest must would Their Overt-acts by humane praise adjust. As Men from use this gross advantage have, That Jury-like, they honour kill, or fave. No Soul of Glory will a Yaunter be, Or by form'd speech declare its Gallantry.

Yet could Man's valour high afcend as Star. I'de have it thought at least Mine went as far. Suppose Flavira's Lips your praise should tell, Or boast that your atcheivments all excell. Wer't not Inglorious If from Rosaline, Prowefs, should want her tongues applause, if mine. Tho' with a Blush she should my deeds declare, And them with Lovers Boafted Fame compare. Love does me to that Competition draw, Without Intended Breach of Freindships Law. When Lyle the Purport of this Speech had weigh'd, His Modest replication thus he made. Vain 'twere for us, Brave friend to Canvas words, Which womans tongue, (with Passion Sway d.) affords : Or think they Lessen honours Compleat Sum, oil val As from their Partiall value Plaudits Come. Believe my heart, which never fo conspir'd With woman's Soul, for deeds to be admir'd. Tho' hardly Man refentingly will blame Affection, when Indulgent to his Fame.

K

7

Know,

I grant that womans Love is highly great Said Lncas, that would honour Stimulate: And thereby Loyall valour fo Inhance, That with it Love's best Glory may advance. Such Rivaldry I willingly allow, And in a friend it bravest must Avow. Give me thy hand as valiantly we make This contract for our Love and honours take: Who of us can Most foes by Conduct flay, Or Perf'nall Gallantry next Battells day; Let him unto his Lady that report, rul and and and the Or for more Grandure Publish first at Court. To which Lyle did, with some Surprize reply, his Brave the Proposall is none can denyor animow and W Yet who untill this time, of Cheif e're heard, and a That would by this bold Method he preferred. And if Agree'd tis left to Martiall Chance, Which of our Swords or conducts 'twill advance. Where accidents fometimes Attempts do Ayd, That could not else Auspiciously be made.

Know, Answer'd Lucas, 'tis not Fortunes power, That Slurrs the Dye of war fome winning howr, That can Impair this Actions high defert, Or from Success Select the Bravest heart. What if refolv'd Like us few have been known, Or that to Camps the brave Novell we own: Th' examples rife, our Glory will be Found, And others teach in valour to abound. Lucas faid Lyle, enough I do embrace This offer, upon which you value place: Without enquiring by a stricter Sense, Why the propofall does from you Commence. And well I know with us fome Cheifs Conspire, That the worlds talk should most their facts admire: And think they bid for Fame by Trumpers found, If by Compare they find themselves renoun'd. Whence Jars and fierce Contests the Soul's divide Of Prov'd Commanders on the Royall fide: Who fo their Animolities prefer, As Loyall Duty Slackens in this war;

And Judge 'tis brave if one another they, In stead of Foes, by Arms attempt to flay. To cease such Ills if our example may, I'le gladly Fight as you propose the way. And others teach, that competitions vye, To turn their Force against the Enemy; And less for Fame then for their King Imploy The Hectors part, as they his Foes destroy. Now reply'd Lucas, I'm endeared more Unto thy Soul, If possible, then before; That with fuch Grandure does confpire to raise Example Joyntly to our Loyall praise. Which to attain the Motive first was mine, The Applications Glory I grant Thine. And tells the world thy Soul does war Approve, Not for the Bloud or Spoil too many Love, But to uphold thy Soveraigns right and Laws, And with a heart unblemish'd serve his Cause. No Greedy hopes or fury Leads thee on, But worth to act what should be Glorious done.

N

F

If

H

I

Thus war's thy honour, and if decrees above Permit that foes my Life shall first remove; I beg of Heaven, that my then dying Face May be last valu'd by thy Lov'd embrace. This Caress pass'd, they next resolv'd to act According as here told their Gallant pact. And if our Muse can give their deeds a Glory, They shall have lasting Fame within her story. Now Rosaline within whose tender Breast, Terror and bad prefage had Greif Imprest. And finding tho' by Speech and blushes try'd, Flavira's heart could not be Mollify'd: Who had, with difregard to other Merit, Allow'd to Lyle the most Heroique Spirit: From whence might dangerous Emulations Spring, If Fame did fuch discourse to Lucas bring. And his fierce minde Incite for love of her, His value by his perill to prefer: Occasion gave her forrow to Revolve The Apprehensions of her tender Soul:

As firmest Love her restless Fears did weigh From her first waking time to end of day. Nor could she take her soft repose at Night For dismall Dreams that did her more affright. By which she thought in Vision she beheld Her Lucas wounded, or to Death compell'd. And Judging that her prefence nor her Fears, Or Love, tho' Interceding with her tears, Could him, her Soul affected, now deter From forwarding his Perills in this War: Resolve she does her person to remove, Howe're obscure she griev'd or dy'd for Love. A Servant old the had of firmest trust, Whose Paps her Beauteous Infancy had Nurst: Whom folely the acquaints with her Intent, And why from Oxford the would now Absent: Tho' to her grief, she did from him depart, Whose Love she still must carry in her heart; Wishing her Breast, when shot flies thick in field, Might Interpose and be her Lovers shield.

Then ask'd her Nurse, if the could find a way Unto some place where she unknown might stay. To which her Matron Servant thus reply'd, Your Gracious Mother formetime e're she dy'd, Me, by her will, your Gardianess design'd, No Less then Naturall Mother to you kind: E're fince your Infant Lips first Suck'd my breast, And kiss'd as you did in my Bosom rest. But why, my dearest Child, must your presage, Even to despair, your Tender heart engage. Don't other Beauties, this fad Time, behold The Armed Lover, and observe when told His Martiall acts, altho' their gentle ear Would fofter Sounds perhaps defire to hear: Yet, who of these, Society or place For this Cause leave, or fight of Warlike Face By them belov'd; And wherefore should you more Then other hearts your Sorrow thus explore. Grant me faid Rofaline, by thy Compare, More Tender Soul'd then many Lovers are:

And that when Drumms do beat or Trumpets Sound, f My Breast, by inward Grief, receives a wound: Least their bold Summons should the armed hand Of him I Love too desperatly command. Be this the Caufe, or let thy Soul devise Any for my remove, more kind, or wife. Her carefull woman having Ponder'd well Her Ladyes Grief, and Tears that from her fell; Her fleep difturb'd, and how she made her moan In Love's fad accents as fhe walk'd alone: Nor could her Lute, or Musick of her Voice, At which when heard Birds did in Groves rejoyce; Affwage the Apprehensions of her Soul, The waves that in her heart did restless rowl. Unto Fair Rosaline, thus briefly said, Loves Pear I fee has your Loves torment Bred: And hard it is, I Judge, by your remove To leave behind the fears that spring from Love. But fince in being Spectator here you find That terrors haft their pastport to your Minde:

I can your Fair removall so contrive, As Wars events shan't to your ears arrive. And where, with wellcome, you may feafons spend By harmless ease till Battles have an end. Guide me kind Foster-mother to the place, Where I may that Content in Soul embrace: And for my Lover there devoutly Pray That Heaven may him defend each Fatall day. Her wife attendant having these words weigh'd, No longer did her Ladies stay perswade. Since in that Juncture expectations were Busy'd by dangers of ensuing war. And rumor'd then that to perform fome deed, By boldest Prowess, Lucas stood oblig'd. Wherefore she with her Ladies hast conspires, After she her had Cloath'd in fit Attires. And over these a Black filk-robe had hung To vail her visage as they passed on. But for her own difguife took no more care Then on her head a Travellers hood to wear.

And thus Night come, they riv'd beyond the Line Which Oxford works and Ramparts did confine. When by few fleps the appointed place they finde. Whether a Trufty Servant was Affign'd To wait with Horses, on which mounted they With all Convenient speed did hast away. Neatly the Virgin could her Palfrey guide, Enur'd for pastime mettl'd steeds to ride: And as hers fometimes now remifly trod, His fault she told him by her rein, or rod, With care her woman to direct her course. Before her rid, tho' worse she rul'd her horse. Yet with best dilligence Imploy'd her eye, That timely the might uncooth Tracks espy: That from her Horses Reps her Ladies might The fafest tread, as on they pass'd that Night. No Pilate, Sayling dangerous Creek or ftreight, When Orient Pearls the riches of his freight, Could with more vigilance his Compass steer, Then for her Lady was her womans care.

Who knowing long that Countreys fite and coaft, From Roads the to less usuall ways had Croft Where least she thought might plundering Sold Or Troups that Foesby Star-light fought to flay. And as secureft way she thought to Chuse, Nights Gloom Increasing, the delign'd did loofe. This Guide now frighted for her Ladies fake, And dangers might enfue from her Mikake: No step her horse did tread on Leaf or Graf. But she fear'd Notice gave where they did pass. And if some spiry Bush by her was feen, She doubted it might armed Man have been. Her Lady feeing thus perplex'd her guide, To lead her boldly on, did foremost ride: Imploring, from above, her Journey's ayd, Who was too Innocent to be afraid. And thus she sometimes wrong and sometimes right, Had forward led till hours near spent of Night. When the by Chance a Candle did percelve That from a Cottage some Small light did give.

Whither

Whither she rid and calling at the door: A Hoory Dame, from spinning on her floor. Opening her wicket, with a churlish flame, At first word gave to her a Harlot's Name. Saying, that she had lost both food and rest By Drabs that with their Troopers her opprest: Nor doubted but fuch horrid Queans were they, And fwore she'd not ayd them if lost their way. Old woman, faid the Virgin, pray forbear Words, that from bad mistake, offend my ear. We to no other purpose hither came, Save to enquire the road t'wards Buckingham: Which I suppose thy Pitty won't deny, Or let this peice of Gold that kindness Buy. The Money handled, foon the Belldame made A homely Curtfey, and her pardon pray'd: Saying infooth Fair Miftress, I perceive I was mistaken, fince you frankly give. We Countrey-folk, God wot, kind words best favour, When they do likewise us with profit favour.

And wish that all as truly ferv'd their King; As we take pains to get and love his Coine. Your way, when pass'd this Gate, the right hand shows And whither you intend directly goes. So hard it is a Kindness to Obtain, Of Rugged Natures, unless won by Gain. The knowing Matron by this little ayd, Her Ladies passage without error made. Towards a forrest where she did Intend Their Journeys trouble fould receive an end. And thus they forward fafely pass'd fome Miles, When Mornings face appear'd with rofy finiles; 10 As Birds feem'd Notes on purpose to prepare, will val Thereby to lessen this foft Virgin's Care; And bad prefage which oft her mind did fill, Who could not as the rode but Tears distill : "Vein'T Or blam'd fometimes her fear, tho' cans'd by Love, That her from Lucas fight did thus remove; And him, if wounded, not in person Aid, Or by her Skill, Or Tears, his Balfom made.

Thus thoughts revolved within her troubled Break As with her faithfull woman on the past. The Morning Smooth as was her Infant Face, When Heaven did New born light in Skies first place. Nor less Auspicious did appear the way On which they forward rid that Early day. No Terrible man beheld, or noise was heard, That might their further Progress have deterr'd. Untill arriv'd unto a parting road That led anto another by a Wood: From whence, as if in Ambush laid before, Of Armed Horse-Men Twenty if not more By speech Outlandish, and of Visage Grim, With rugged fury apprehended them. And like a Dove, when by a Vulture feiz'd, This Virgin Beauty was by these surprized. Whil'st the, as Boilerough they her farround From ready thought had this expedient found; As them, to spare rude search, she frankly gave Her Coyn and Gems, and what then all she'd save,

A little Picture Jewells did adorn, And next her breaft for Lucas fake was worn. When these they had, and from her woman too Had taken what they found about her now; Like fierce Banditti's that could not decide How among thehem Stollen Booties to divide: .... but From honrid words to Oaths their threats arafe, Jail And next prepar'd to force their keeneft Blows. Till fome more Temperate did advise the reft, othe That fince by Power these women they possest but And things of value, duteous twas that they will'T Should to Kanbralders presence them convey wo ve sua To whose Decision their contests should wield of e? Herbeing their Supream Officer and Rield! bran stady But now to feethewayand to his awardyood of won tul Their lovely Captive towardshim they Guards M. of No Beauteous Saint, when to be Marwold Jed il By Faces dreadfull as the Gorgon's head : 1990 354 Could more Serenely resolute appear, Then Rosaline did amongst fuch figures here.

Walloone Vanbralder was, and hither came, As Verse relates, to raise his Martial Name. When many of his hardy * Nation were Paid by the Honses to affist their War. When this Bold Leader Rosaline had seen, And well observ'd her Comely form and Mein: His Looks were troubled and Amaz'd his Eyes, Like one from sudden wonder felt surprise; Unto his Breaft Throbs did Allarums Beat And rais'd within a Lovers ardent heat. T'Injoy her: Person fully he inclin'd, But by what Method no less pos'd his Mind: So Love and Honour Rruggled in his Soul, we I Where hard twas found to yield them joyntly rule. H But now to feem Compos'd, howe're he meant To Manage or Compleat his Loves intent; vol He kindly Bow'd, and to her words address'd That Gentle feem'd; yet others with them mix'd.

* That some Numbers of Walloons were entertained by the 41 Parliament, for their Military Service, is well known to all that are acquainted with that Time.

Which told that Martial Trust severe must be, Against whoe're befriend the Enemy: Or fuch that might Intelligence Convey, Tho' of her Sex, by any Subtile way. Or should, excuse Me that I put the Case, More to deserve some Chiefs desir'd Embrace: From Camp to Camp a Beauteous fpy arrive, And Teach him next our ruine to contrive. A Crime like this the Houses did of late Detect, in handsom Lady, 'gainst their state. Wherefore you must expect before you go, That I your person will and business know: Your taken Jewells you may have again, But Lucas Picture shall with me remain. The cause this whisper briefly shall declare, And fuch as will require your kindest Ear. What thought can guess how her Soul was perplext, As this man had thus coucht his amorous Text. Whilst she, that for loves Pitty only fled, Must here detested Lovers Presence dread.

But fince his words, at which her Soul took fright. Had not as yet arriv'd to wicked height: She thus with modest confidence reply'd: Justly by me your Inference is deny'd, Since I have nothing done against your cause, Or what may Interfere with Martial Laws. Wars daring Conflicts and their fierce refult, Have been my dread but never my confult. And were the Motive of my Journey known, Enough 'twould prove the truth which here I own. Well I discern (faid he ) that Womans thought Can speciously evade or excuse fault. But know that to my power no less 'tis free To tax your Crime as it appears to Me: Or fend you to the Houses under Guard, Who may you long Imprison before heard. Tho' unto you I gentler am Inclin'd, As to my heart your Beams do passage find. Perhaps you'l call this Love, and next expect That honour fould in Me cause its Neglect:

Ar

T

T

T

D

T

1

1

I

And you by Pass-port to your Hero fend, That story may my Temperance Commend. To which, for glorious praise, I might comply, Tho' Honour by that Act should Love deny: Did not Me other obligation Iway, To discharge which, I must your person stay. Then Venus, Martial Sir, tis I perceive That has Commenc'd within you this Intrigue. And whence my persons safety you propose, If with your wishes mine would kindly close. Are you a Soldier, and thus guide your Charms, Which Cupid would despise did he wear Arms. Or is't some stratagem, I can't discern, That you in some loose Forceign Camp might learn. Be't what it will, my Virtue I dare truft, Howe're to Honour you'd appear unjust. When this return, this Walloon-Chief did hear, Guilt touch'd his Soul, where love would guilt endear; Whilst as she Pleaded Virtues cause to him: His lov's Transport he then did greatest deem.

Her Grace, looks, Speech, by Natures special Art, He Judg'd design'd Allurements to his heart: And thought she did luxuriously adjust That Beauty had no Virtue by her trust. From this Course Principle he does design How Fraud with Lust should wicked aid combine, And by a fond device so manage Time, As might compleat his vile intended Crime. And thus does by Fictitious Story tell That fad disaster late had him befell: As he a Beauty, to his Soul most dear, Had lost by rude surprize this Time of War. Perhaps conceal'd by fome Chiefs rigid Power, That but too foon her Person may deflower. A Lady lately, whether her or no, From full report I cannot certain know, By Lucas was detain'd I understand; If for his Pledge in you is in my hand. And if Exchange of Beauty compass may Her wish'd return, yours shall her ransome pay.

Bu

Fre

Th

Ha

TI

T

T

0

A

T

F

But should I apprehend, which Heaven avert From e're affleting of her fair defert, That any Impious Man, by Luftfull force, Has stain'd her Person to her Souls Remorse: The fame I'le act on you, unless I find That your Embrace proceeds from yielding mind. Let chance the valiant Lucas hither Bring, To fight at once for his Love's fake and King: On Terms refolv'd defiance I'de express, And tell that I his Rofaline possess. This Synon-Lover having form'd this Tale, His wicked Ends pretextly to avail; And by feign'd Caufe fome feeming Grandieur add Unto the Method of his being bad : Concludes, that foon his Subtle Terrors would This Virgins mind unto his purpose mold: And to her blushes joyn a yielding sense, Till kisses won her totall Complaisance. Whose breast now fill'd with forrow, and her eyes, Like drops engend2ring in ferenest Skies,

Tho' big with tears, yet did allow no grief, By which, from this vile Man, she'd ask relief: But look upon him with a Scornfull ray, That more then words did her disdain convey. Her faithfull woman, the' attending near, Could, not the fense Vanbralder utter'd, hear: He having, aside some steps, her Lady took, Before he had his luftfall accents spoke: Yet in her prospect of his dismall Face, Where Red and Pale did vary'd Horrors place: His rough aspect and eyes that fiercely rowl'd, As Comets when Prodigious Acts foretold; She faw her Ladies danger, and by Tears, Shed in abundance, did imply her Fears. And with a womans fury next delign'd T'apbraid the fervor of his wicked mind; Or else to kill him by some proper way, and Tho' Guarded by his Troops, in open day. And if the Fact her Lady could defend, She'd gladly forfeit life to give his End.

B

But otherwise it was above decreed, That this Libidinous Forreign Chief should bleed. Whose hasty Scouts to him now Tydings brought Of Marching Powers, on good Terms might be fought: Their Numbers less then he Commanded there, And to the next Campaign arrived were. Adding that Lucas as Intelligence faid, Before them as Supream Commander Led. When fierce Vanbraider heard brave Lucas's name, He bid a Guard furround the Beauteous Dame : And next, her to some rising space convey, Whence the might view the action of that day: And with what Courage he'd her Here Fight, Or kill him, if he could, her love to fpight: Then with stern visage does a march Command, Till near arriv'd where did Embattled stand His valiant Foes, and next a halt he makes, And to his Trumpetter this Message speaks. Tell Lunas, if he Leads the Troups I fee, That here Vanbralder stands his Enemy:

Not only as I act the Soldiers part, But as a Lover more Inflam'd my heart. The Object I admire he'l pronely guess, When told that I fair Refaline possess. And might alledge, if his belief 'twould gain, That cause besides does bid me her retain. Who am from chance of War perhaps of late, In my lost Mistress full unfortunate. As just it is, that I his Lady Ray: And it occasion calls, some future day, Her person as a fair exchange allow For her I loft, and would recover now. This Picture too which Rofaline did wear, As his Lov'd figure, to him likewise bear. When Lucas this strange Errand understood, Horror and rage fomented in his Bloud. And to express his Detestation said, What Theory has vicious Man display'd Like him who does Ingloriously confer-Fowlest dishonour on the Name of War:

And observations more Fruitfull make When heinous presidents from Camps they take: As if their Circuits, which the Schools should be Of Ethicks rais'd to bravest dignity, Did worst conducters unto Vice contain, Or fuch, who pronest Lives with vileness stain. Wherefore for Honours Caufe, and Glorious War, 'Gainst him my Soul and Sword defiers are. And if my Arms can't Rosaline relieve, May Heaven her Virtue happy fafety give. Enough I've spoke, and let Vanbralder know, My Trumpet foon a warlike charge shall Blow. This Messenger return'd; in Martial form They led their Powers: fo Pilots, when a Storm Is near approach'd, with utmost conduct try To stem the adverse Waves their Enemy. Lowd neigh'd the Horse, and with erected Ear Fierce noise of War couragiously did hear. Whose eager strength would fain his Guider slight, And without Reins now carry him to Fight: Whilft

Whilst as the Surface bears his Trampling Feet. Earth founds, and vents a Feaverish fume and heat. Tedious was time by Gallant Lucas thought, Untill his opposits he closely fought: Impuls'd at once for his Kings cause to kill, And Loves revenge, which fury did instill; And as their Forces now just meeting were, Vanbralder does aloud to his declare: That who of them so boldly could succeed, As to leave Lucas on the Surface dead: With Plumes and gifts he should rewarded be For killing his Chiefs hated Enemy. Smartly alike both fides their onfets made, And first with shot no time of death delay'd. Yet scarce a man had room, when kill'd, to fall; As close they fought in Warlike posture all. So pois'd their courage and their strength of Horse, As neithers shock a while had greatest force. When Steeds did opposite Steeds with Fury Bite, That could not spurr'd bear Ryders on to Fight.

Whofe

Expressing what a shame it was to them On Forreign Soyl to fly or defert him. And tho' by words he could but few perfuade, Yet with those few, to charge, resolv'd he stay'd. When Lucas in pursuit near him arriv'd, And by his Plumes and Scarf the Man descry'd To be the person he that day had sought, And would on Loves account have chiefly fought: He bids, with ready voice, the Walloon know, That he might fingly fight with Lucas now. Who would not by fuccess or Numbers stay Him yet from gaining a victorious day: If by Encount'ring hand to hand he'd try Which of them two in Field mould boldeft dye. Glad was Vanbralder to receive this word, And charg'd him home with Pistoll-shot and Sword. The first of which had almost Lucas stuned, Tho' not enforcing any Bloudy wound, As 'gainst his Head-piece did the Bullet light, And left thereon a fign of this fierce fight.

But Lucas, foon recovering, near him got, Hoping to kill this mighty man with shot: Unto whose face his Pistol he advanc'd, Which would not fire however fo it chanc'd. And now their Combat was to end by Sword; And one would judge that Method did afford No small advantage to this huge Walloon, Who had so vast a Weapon of his own. Or near as great as that appears to Eyes That in th'Tower for Conqueror William's lies. As here this mighty Sword Vanbralder weilds, Whose Edge he thought would cut through hardest A furious blow he at Brave Lucas makes, Who by his steeds quick motion it escapes: And, by a Nimble manage, turn'd again, He Cuts his Foes hand off and bridle Rein: Whose furious Horse, thus freed from rule by Bit, Disdains his riders Weight should on him sit: And boundeth oft unto a wondrous height, As this, or that way moves his ruleless might:

Till down a Precipice he takes his way. And does by fall his Mighty Malter flay. Thus Providence did death Vanbralder give, Whose Soul, in Body, was too bad to live. The King's Troops many, befides Walloon foes, Kill'd here of English we may well suppose: But to what Number Fighters fell that day, Our Muse does no Particulars convey. Tho' near a thousand Horse on each side fought, If from her Computation deeds be fought. What strange dismay by fears and doubts was then Th' Affliction of the Beauteous Rosaline : Who Guarded by Vanbralders Power might fee The Bloudy Toyles of that days Victory. And more concern'd in Soul perhaps beheld Her belov'd Lucas engag'd in that Field With Stout Walloons, or hage Vanbralders might, As they two did in Terrible Combat fight. Who having fully now dispers'd his Foes, To free her Person next he boldly goes.

Whom herce Vanbralder had plac'd under guard, Which now its bold Attendance foon discharg d: After beheld the fortune of this day, And to prevent their danger fled away. When he to her arriv'd and faw a space The gastly paleness of her lips and Face: And how her Cheeks were fometimes drawn awry, Like Mortall whom Convulsive fits do ply; And as the fixed Stars appear in Skies, Moveless beheld the Glory of her Eyes. And thus within her womans arms fhe lay. Who diligent was by every carefull way Her Lady in Lifes conflict to Affift, And by her help her grievous pains relift: As fometimes the her Beautious Temples strok'd, Or had by Prayers and Tears heaven's and Invok'd. In hast had Lucas from his steed remov'd. Yet fear'd to fee the face of her he Lov'd : As he beheld her Cheeks Impair'd of red, And features, like remains of Beauty dead.

When from his Souls deep anguish thus he faid; If Speech by me to Rosaline here Made Can passage find, and wellcome from her ear, 'Tis beg'd that she'd think Lucas now does fear : And that his Soul that never yet could weep, Or fuffer from his breast a sigh to creep, When his bloud by most desperate wounds was shed; Or feen in fields his bravest friends lye dead: Does both, as he her danger does behold; And if his Lips from hers could remove cold, He'd willingly by it Loves power explore, If that might her Life's pristine warmth restore: At Least he'd take it as his Last farewell; If her Soul must on earth no longer dwell. But whilest he thus did his Lov's passion vent, Her woman on her Ladies Cure intent, Had from a Violl Cordiall-drops convey'd, Which Polyasters skill 'tis thought had made, And 'twixt her Lips dispos'd so much of them, As did her Life from Danger foon redeem.

Tho' to that weakness brought she scarce could speak, As by the hand he kindly her did take : The hand he kindly her did take : Whilest all she utter'd was but to express Why she remov'd, and love of him Confess. Which foon he granted, who before perceiv'd The Cause that had her Gentle Temper griev'd: And how for love of him, and kindest fear, She had withdrawn to her difaster here. Yet would not further passages relate, That to her Mind disquiet might create: And chiefly did conceal how with brave Lyle He had conspir'd to Ryvall Martiall Toyl. But to oblige heroickly her Senfe, From his Souls Greatness did these words dispense. Sorry is Lucas that he now must fay That he can't Love appoint a Nuptiall day : 1000 Since vow'd I am that Hymen ne're shall light Taper for me, till Rebells cease to fight: Nor Houses sit that by obtruded vote Dare Arms in Field against their King promote.

But when with smoothest Brow peace yields her smiles, And rightfull war requires no more my Toyls: I'le then fair Rosalines embrace desire, And meet her wishes with a Lovers fire. Till when to Heaven's protection I'le her leave. And place the Judges best may her receive. Or where she least may of herce Battells hear, and herce Or what in them my Martiall perills are : And whenfo'ere I full perceive their end, The wellcome News to Rofaline I'le fend. In whose behalf her woman does declare, Her Lady, as yet weak, and speech would spare, That well the Method he propos'd comfpir'd With what, by present thought, she most desir'd: Affuring him that when they fix'd on place, He should have notice in Convenient space. Being thus refolv'd, and by Brave Linens feen That in few Minuts perfectly Serene The Beauteous form appear'd of Rosaline, And strength restor'd by wonderous Medicine :

He gently lifts her to her Saddles feat, And, with his kindest farewell, kiss'd her feet. And that she might the more securely ride, Appoints, to ayd her way, a knowing guide. But to what place her person she withdrew, My Muse, in proper time, Intends to shew. Whilest valour, Loyalty, and Love's high Glory, Commends this Hero's worth to future story. Who having then obtain'd a Glorious day, With Trumpets Sound be March'd his defigh'd way. Thus raging war fermented every where By Fates decree, this most unhappy year: In which the King, tho' much his Force Impair'd. As 'gainst him had the Houses four years warr'd; Their Interest Mighty and no less their power, From Londons Endless Srength, and Treasures store: A Was Northward March'd, as many did fuppose, T'encounter in those Regions Scottish Foes; Who would not Grant that duty should compell to HIT Their Persons in their colder Clime to dwells de de

And Southward to Affift the Houses came Their Friends by League, but with more zealous flame Their bold partakers as they hop'd to share Treasures and Spoyls of England by this War. Yet nearer then these, Enemies were found, That 'gainst the King, at that time did abound. Thus was great Leicester fill'd with fighting Men. That the King might not there have passage then: But be repuls'd in case he should assay, To Curb that daring City in his way. The King his Summons fends to this bold Town. Which, like to others Principled, did own, That Royal Power did not of right Command, Whilst it the Houses Arms in Field withstand. So far Allegiance badly then decay'd, As Men by Power or Interest were sway'd. Affronted thus, the King foon Storms the place, Which Stiffy did refift some few hours space: Till oft attaqu'd by res'lute Foot and Horse, Like Boiftrous Waves that break through Bays by force, bna

This City they by Strennous onfet take. And with its Spoils their numbers richer make. This Action great, yet Signally must be, By the Permissive will of Heavens decree, The last Successfull that the King obtain'd, As he by Arms his Crown and Life maintain'd. Forward the King meant to have Northward gone, His Soldiers heighten'd by this City won: And were for number and repute the Flower Of his remaining Millitary Power, But foon diverted was his defign'd course; As Fairfax led his fierce New modell'd force In fight of Oxford, and dread to Create, Seem'd, Siege-like, there his Army to dilate. Hoping that Town, the Kings Force not at hand, Durst not, if frighted well, his Power withstand. Nor did he want Intelligence within, That could avail him from * Sydesmonds Sin:

* A Remarkable Parasite and Traytor as he is described in the Third Book of this Poem.

Or others by the Houses money paid, As usefull Tydings they to them convey'd. The Queen who with her Court and Ladies there Resided then, what unkind cause of sear Did this Appearance to her bosom bring, Tho' the dear Confort to a Mighty King: Since Londons furious Senate durst decree Her Person Guilty cause their Enemy: And that she like a Kings Imperiall Wife, Endeavour'd to preserve his Crown and life. When her concern was by Fame's speedy wing wool so Carry'd unto the most Indulgent King: ald I all and I al He as a Lover and a Sovereign Chief, and Chief at Refolv'd to give his Heroin Queen relief.

Henri V. V. Henri the help in the heart, and hearth

Not dil be wree intelledace with his.

The

radeb sedimulia year.

The EIGHTH BOOK.

The Argument.

Laye stok

Fairfax does fomctime before Oxford stay:
The Queen a prospect of his Army takes.

A Martial Habit's by Flavira worn,
In which she deeds to wonder does perform.
Sydesmond subtile Cromwell does deceive
For private Gain, not service of his Prince.
Naisby's Fierce Battle, and the fatal loss
The Crown there suffers, after which the King,
His Forces every where declining, is
By the vile Armys power sumetime Restrain'd;
And next Imprison'd in the Isle of Wight.

Small was at Oxford Loyali hearts repose,
As Eyes there saw how bold and numerous Foes
Begirt the Town, and as appear'd days light
Allarum'd all within to Arm for Fight:
If as Desendants Bulwarks they'd maintain,
And posts that did least Fortify'd remain;

Or for more Glory skirmishes design By daring parties led beyond their Line. Whilft youthfull Students Colledges forfake, And Pikes and Guns, to defend Science, take. To lead whom Gravest of the Long Robe joyn'd, And unto Arms their Pupills disciplin'd: Inciting them from apt and Learned Phrase, To Merit, Next the Muses, Martial praise. When the fair Queen and Ladies of her Court Early awak'd, and with a Glorious port Ascended to a Turret rais'd on high, That fac'd the thick arrayed Enemy. Where being feated, by each Mene and Grace, She added to the fplendors of her Face: Or fuch from Grandeur of her Bloud relate To Daughter of French Henry the Great. And now Magnanimously beheld the force Of her Opposers ranks of Foot and Horse: Their Martial equipage and daring Spirit, And what their valours she allow'd might Merit

-

Did they by rightfull War their King affift, and Just Or Forreign powers by his Command refift. Next pittying their bold errors dropt a Tear, Whose Soul, in perills, ne're had wept for fear. The Female Nobless waiting round the Queen, a sale A Like leffer Stars in Constellations seen, When one of supreme Magnitude and height Appears the most conspicuous to fight : A By apteft words did fev rally extell was and and an analysis The ferene worth of her Majestick Soul: AWO I sid!T Wishing that for her fake, Time did allow, and only As heretofore when Dames us'd dart and bow, we sell That they might with Men hardy Courage vye; In Date And force them, when array'd, by arms to fly. I had A This Glorious Spectacle by Fairfax feen, by lor doument And known that there spectator fate the Queen: His Modesty, that always did attend bill and raid of Actions that do his Valour most commend, ins Produc'd his Blush, and thought his Cause less brave, As their perfections it defiance gave.

But Cromwell hating all superiour sway, And Legall power which Subjects should obey: Projected had in his aspiring thought, How he'd to supreme height himself promote: As gradually the Ligaments of State, He'd fever, and vile Factions animate; That in the end he might subvert the Throne, And Line of Brittifk Kings to famous known: And in this juncture gladly would have gain'd This Town, where for fecurity remain'd. The Queen and Royall Children, whom to furprize He now and after blackly did devise only profession And calling Hugon, on whose preaching part, Aided besides tis thought by Magick-Art. He much rely'd to fascinate the Soul, And spirit Men against their Sovereigns rule: To him thus faid, well I diftern thy Gifts v In Prayer and Preaching, and fuch Spiritual shifts As do Enthusiasms usefully disperse, For which I can't enough thy Fame rehearfe;

When

W

1

I

When I revolve that quaintest Pulpit-cheat Could but thin schifms heretofore dilate: To Aid our Cause, yet know not why they fight. Which Mighty Nothing, from thy Preached fense, Does fruitfull use of Souls to us dispense. The land of O're Church and State Faith's Chaos first must spread, E're here Created Rule Improveth dread. Then Hugon hugs, and bide him apt Texts find T'Instruct their Forlorn hopes when next defign'd, To which this Centing Imp did thus reply, and will What words enough can Crommel magniful oc 9 start VI) Fairfax too meanly were to you compard said ada of T As you for Brain and Valour stand rever'd, again tog bill Heaven has throughout your Visage Sprinkl'd grace. Like Mofes things your elect Nose and face. 15 11019 bas Each of your Features do by Semblance speak A Scripture Hero, and his Context make. When to New-England banish'd for a Crime, By Prelats held Sedition at that time,

In dream I there Prophetique Vision had; And faw, as now, your Person Arm'd and clad. And how at Marfton-Moor a Cannon shot. By Miracle fwarv'd, that elfe had miss'd you not. For Joy asleep I smil'd, and will some day To applaud you my dream in Pulpit fay. Accept this Lift, in which you'l some perceive, That to our Cause their lives will fearless give: Call'd Antinomians, or no matter what, If to support our Ends they Act and Plot. Their Courage fitly will this Town oppose: (Where Bookmens rules affift our greatest foes) The Goths that fack'd old Superstitious Rome, Did not more fierce destroyers thither come, * Then these would Oxfords Libraries despoil, And Profligate the Studious Gownmens Toyl. Thy Catalogue, faid Cromwell, I embrace; And for facin'rous deeds against this place, Such Principles and Swords I will Imploy, As, Our Foe, prating Science, shall destroy.

And thou a Spiritual Renagado known, Our Army shall for that Complyance own Thee Chaplain-General, and Impower'd to preach Sworded when e're thou men wouldst boldest teach. To aid our counfells few we must scelect, Tho' in that manage Fairfax we neglect : Or else allure his easy Nature on, To forward deeds he meant not should be done. But now the motions of this Town let's fee, And how t'oppose prepar'd the Enemy. Mean while Flavira, who from height of Mind Fame to her Sex and beauty had defign'd: And would not grant that Natur's elder choice, Or custom, deem'd by her man's partiall voice, Should Prowess most on Sex of men confer, And Value heighten'd by their deeds in war: Excluding women by a tender Name, And habit, from advent'ring life for fame. Or feldom rais'd to higher future Glory, Then to adorn, with Men, a painted Story.

And next Magnanimously does difdain all and That womans habit should her Soul restrain From fuch Atchievments, Hero's might admire. And in her brave efteem, her Sex raife higher. Discreetly weighing the Commanding Cause. That Subjects call'd to Fight for King and Laws. And tho' no woman Summon'd it to Avd. None were forbid, she judg'd, if not afraid. Nor did she doubt but in Lyles Gallant Minde Her virtues would sublimer value finde: If as her Soul his valour did esteem; His might, on that account, her worthver deem: And by alternate Glory next Improve The estimate of Fame as well as Love. But her designs she so resolv'd to Guide, As for Flavira the'd be not espy'd: Whileft habited like man to fields she'd go. And there encounter with the warlike Foe. Her woman-dreffer did not now explore Further her Ladies fense then told before:

Thinking

Thinking that to raise Mirth, by lone Surprile, She did intend her person to difguise. It is the Or from her love of Arms and sprightly Minde, To visit the Kings Camp, thus clad design'd. Perhaps that valiant Lyfle might there confess How well she did become a Heroine dress. But this she might intend her waiter thought, When way from Oxford might be fafer fought: Or chiefly to take pleasure in her glass, By feeing how, Arm'd, her Figure Beauteous was. By quick degrees her Lady she undrest, And on her flender Body plac'd a Veft, For mode and Colour like the youthfull wear, Of fuch as Gayest then led Troops of war. Next compass'd round her tender wast with Steel, Which tho' her pain she seem'd no pain to feel. Upon her helmet a white Crofs was plac'd, To shew that Spotless Faith her valour grac'd, And Just defyance of the blondy Crime Of Boundless Herefies that Fatall Time.

A Negro Page she for attendant took, That to her Horse and Arms would carefull Look: Charging her woman, if inquiry made Of means by which she undiscern'd convey'd Her personall remove, she was to say The wonder must remain to future day. When in convenient time she should receive Notice to come and ferve her if alive. And mounted on her Steed by early day. Through Lanes and Streets she took the privat'st way, Till beyond Oxfords outworks she had Joyn'd air With Forces for Bout Skirmishes design'd. Where with a dauntless ear she heard the Noise Of Canon, that most terribly destroys; And faw how shot off heads from bodies flew, And Comely Limbs whose want the Owners slew. Nor brandish'd weapons, nor the array'd field, Or grimmest looks which Foes embattell'd veild Could her concern, as with a gentle Brow These Horrors with contempt, she then did view.

Whil'ft boldly weilding of her Naked Sword, She thought it's bright reflection did afford More beauty to her face then e're before She from her clearest Mirror could explore. And like fome youthfull Squire that had abroad Attain'd in Camps a gen'rous warlike Mode : 11 11 11 She courteoufly to Militants then speaks warrant velice As room amongst their marshall ranks she takes. Adding befides, their courage to Incite, and median The Caufes Just concern for which they fight And how the young, She early had Inclin'd To feason with best fortitude her Minde. Whilst other Tempers, if but fine in face, To meaner charms, in stead of War's gave place? As fhe had thus express'd some-Troops appear That to attaque her Party order'd were Which when observ'd, she blam'd Cheifs of her side That now too flow, she thought to charge did guide. Longing to come to Strenuous handy blows And dye her Maiden Sword in Bloud of Foes:

Engage they fharply did, and for a while Fairfax his Party something did prevail: For they felected Bodies were of Men. By Cromwell held most Zealous fighters then. But foon Flavira, wanting other guide, Did rally into Form her worsted side: And by renewing of the Charge again, Not only did th' opposing Force restrain: But them purfuing to their body threw A hand Granade, which firing divers flew. Some tell it near to Crowwells Horse did light, As with referves he feconded the fight: But howfoe're fame does her deeds report, 'Tis fure that he observ'd her brave effort: And blam'd his Soldiers 'cause they could not flay One that so boldly fought their Rancks that day. And Iwore, by Lord of Hofts, that they should try Once more to flay this daring Enemy. For fure some Spirit tis, or not the least Of Devills in a lufty Popish Priest:

As by the Crofs I plainly apprehend, That does upon the Youngsters Helmet stand. Such Croffing Enemies I'de first destroy, That with their Catholick Arms our Cause annoy. And will be Loyal to their Sovereigns trust, Tho' his Laws their Faiths fafety don't adjust. Away and lose no time by longer halt, Left valour cool e're you again asiault. 'Tis but a party, howe're hold they are; And yours is more if Numbers we compare. Our General would fcorn it should be faid, That he detach'd more Troops to give you aid. And if you can't leave all that party dead, I'le him reward that but the Crossers head To me presents: a Superstitious fool, That after Crofling fights without a Rule. Commanded thus, they readily affail, And hope their valours fiercely may prevail. When Oxfords Chiefs no less couragious led, That both fides receiv'd loss from Numbers dead.

But this could not Phanatique Fury stay, Which through th' oppoling party forc'd its way. That in some haste the bravest did retire, Whilf Friends and Foes Flaviras Soul admire. Who fometimes turning fought, then fled to fight, Then fiercely wheels and destroys Foes by fight. A many blows at her oppofers ftrook, Yet blam'd their force when view'd her beauteous look. Perhaps rejoyc'd as by indulgent chance, Their Swords her face did miss, and sideway glance. If so her visage pleas'd in Ragefull toyl, What man would not admire her kindest smile. And as she thus engag'd, some fighters stay'd, That boldly fought for her defence and ayd: When others rallying, onfets made again, And did their ground fuccessfully maintain. Till Prudence had oblig'd 'em to retire, As they beheld more Num'rous parties nigher, Which Fairfax from his mighty Camp had brought, And could not be by power of Oxford fought.

When

When Crompell faw his parties forc't retreat, Whom most Flavira's Courage did defeat, He bit his Tongue for rage, and curs'd in mind, As bloudily revenge he then defign'd. And could not in his Visage for a space, Compose the usual Cousenage of his face. Till looks and speech conspir'd his Canting way, Or when for wicked ends he'd fast and pray. Vowing that for the Croffed Champions fake, He'd vengeance on that Christian figure take. For as in front, a Cross that figure bore, Who was by Metaphora Romish Whore, So in the Forehead of each Church we fee Erected is a Harlots Dignity. Wherefore 'cwill well become our Zealous flame To ruine Crosses, and fo Churches maim, That Saints before most comely figur'd there, May without Nose or Limbs provoke our jeer. And fure his power by Time was bolder known, That Silver-shrin'd Diana melted down,

And her admir'd Temples Arneture raz'd, Then he, by holy Coft, there first her plac'd. Hugon when heard these words did laugh for joy. Since thus Commission'd Churches to destroy: And plunder from within them what was left, Since Abbys fall enrich'd their growing Sect. And next declar'd, altho' by Heavenly will, They did not then the daring Crofier kill: That better 'twas as he'd difperse a tale, Which more, then kill'd the Imp, should them avail. And how True-Protestant Children to devour. This furious thing was fent by Romish power: And unto wonder could, instead of Meat, A Wooden Cross with Superstition Eat. And, should the King prevail, had power from thence, T'afflict our fleshly friends by Penitence. And force our Dames, that Thimbles, Bodkins, wear, By Crosses figur'd on 'em Crimes to fear. This I confess last audience I forgot, As I had long discours'd of other plot.

Cromwell,

Crommell, the Tale approv'd, and bid when next, On this occasion, he should chuse a Text: To Fairfax fo to preach as might his Soul, Unto their change defign'd, devoutek Foo!. And now bids Hugon him amuse by Prayer, Made against Kingly Rule and Spiritual Power, Whilst Cromwell would with Ireson Counsels joyn, That fitter was to further their defign. Yet, tho' some days fac'd Oxford, little more Their Army did then was perform'd before. Now had the Sun, within the Western Main, Some hours his Steeds refresh'd, as Poets fain. When the Moon's Orb with Stars, Nights twinkling Arose to comfort Earth with Beams from Skies. A feafon that defigning Man fits beft, Whilst others would Indulge their harmless rest. When Fairfax had strict Guards near Oxford fet, That passers thence and spies might Intercept, Of which some had detain'd a single man, Who from that City haffily mov'd then:

Like Caffock'd Schollar Grave his Robe appear'd, And no less Reverend feem'd his face and beard; alt no For Priest they took him, which enough that time, If but for Function fake, was deem'd a Crime. And fearthing of him found a written pass, By the Queens Royal hand inscribed was. Death in worst shape they unto him declare, Thinking, for Popish Fighters, he made Prayer, Or with the Armed Crosser Joyn'd of late, Whose Valour boldly did their force defeat. Smiling he heard their threats, and told that he Would Cramwell, if brought to him, fatisfy. To whom conducted, Cromwell took no care Further a while t'inspect the man's affair: Or thought to hang him without more ado, Since that he was a Priest he judged true. Till he maturer fome concerns did weigh, That possibly this Man could foon betray, Either as Fear of death or torture might His Soul unto discovery affright.

AI

T

F

And taking him apart; the man he found; To be Sydesmond, to his purpose sound: Who holding of his false beard in his hand, Like part on stage that undifguis'd does stand, Fawning Address he thus to Cromwell makes: See Famous Chief what pains Sydesmond takes, That dangerously his person does Commit To diverse perills whilst Imploy'd his wit, For your Assistance, and the Cause you serve, What'ere of King and Queen fuch deeds deferve. Kind Lady, she her pass-port me allow'd, That none might me Impede when I remov'd Where Royall powers Command, in hope that I, As promis'd 'twas, would 'gainst yours prove a spy. I took the pass that you might better see The Confidence these Soveraigns have in me. Whilft I do now my utmost Care Imploy That they may Oxford's rule small time Injoy: And how Triumphantly your Army may This Teeming Eagle and her young ones Slay. Observe Observe this persons Name I here present. Whom I corrupted have to my Intent. And shall to you betray an Oxford-port, By which the Town you'l gain by fmall effort. But first I must make good the Promis'd Coyn That is affur'd him apon word of mine. Not doubted by the Houses that for gain Unto their Cause, I such Intrigues maintain. Cromwell embrac'd the Motion, and profest Sydefmond was most dear unto his Breast: And should Advantage to come receive, By which his favour richly he'd perceive, Since he endeavour'd so their power to ayd, As Martiall prospects would be surer made. And who'd not in a Perlous Journey Try The shortest way, if more Secure thereby. Here take this Gold, and let the Care be thine, In proper time, to perfect this Defign. The Coyn Sydefmond takes, and when alone Laugh'd well to think how fmooth his cheat had gone.

And

An

Th

Sin

TI

AT

•7

E

And that by his device he could Cajoal. The fubtile Cromwell's disbeleiving Soul. Since neither Hell nor he did know the man That would give up a Port in Oxford then. And was a fiction for his ends devis'd. And by his craft might be enough difguis'd; As things at Oxford chang'd, or aid arriv'd, E're this defign, if true, could be contriv'd. And hasting his return unto the Queen, 'Twas fure he told her not with whom he'd been. Who by a tale well feign'd another way, Expected from her bounty thanks and pay. The Senat's Army that before this Town Some days had flaid and nothing Signal done: Drew off, referring unto future Hour What might be there effected by their Power: Either as Force or Powerfull Gold Bould aid Designs, that might in time be sirer laid. Having from best intelligence now heard. That the King did his Northern March retard.

And after Leicester by Storm bravely won. Defign'd to guide his Army t'wards this Town. Least in his absence Oxford straiten'd were; And fiege, or Storm make his Foes Victors there. Fairfax who had with res'inte Crommed thought, Time long e're they the Royal Army fought: Their numbers great, and full compos'd of Men That 'gainst the King were fiercest fighters then: Refolv'd with all convenient haft to find Some fit Campaign where Battle might be joyn'd. Oxford thus freed, and Supernumeraries there Which well the Town could in that juncture spare: The Prudent Queen and Council did detach Troops thence of Cavaldry strictly charg'd to March Unto their Sovereigns Camp the nearest way, And boldly aid him on next Battles day. With these Flavira, full resolv'd that same Should to her Martial deeds give lasting name, Like fome young Hero rides a Voluntier, To meet in far Campaign's severest War.

Diana's Form, when brightest Arm'd in Field, Could ne're fuch chaft and fprightly lufters yield, As did her comely Beams and Warlike Grace; Enfoul'd by Mars, tho' Venus was her Face. And Journeying thus till Night for rest did call, The worst bed sometimes to her Lot did fall. Yet with no Niceness, Beauties refin'd Care, She did that way her persons hardship spare. Nor doubts my Muse that such shift then she made, Tho' feeming Man, that none were with her Lay'd. Whose Last days march more admir'd then the rest. As accidents are by our verse exprest: Has fuch relation unto persons here, As will to wonder, speak their shame or fear. A Yeoman's wife, handfome, young and Gay, Black-eye'd, to boot, whence darts flew Cupid's way: Was Landlady when from these Troops did come, Commanders to her house for quarter-Room. Mongst whom Flavira did arrive unknown, And hop'd, within her walls, to ly alone.

The Beauteous housewife, as does flory tell. Lov'd youthfull Soldiers Dalliance full well: And was especially 'tis thought that Night. Enamour'd of one there of goodly plight. Her Husband old and Jelous to dispair, Observ'd her looks abroad, at home, at prayer: And if her eye betray'd a wanton Rowla It deeply frighted his Suspicious Soul. But the found means to keep his humour low, Lest his words should her Amorous Genius show : Saving that man does worst himself Cornute, That from suspicion would discourse promote: And how their Gentile quarterers might Complain, If she to wellcome them, should Smiles restrain. For which some Testy busbands in that time Plunder'd had been to punish their harsh Crime. This Motive most the Covetous man Cajol'd, Who above all things fear'd to lose his Gold. At Supper pleas'd they stoutly fed and quaff'd, And with the Beauteous house-dame talk'd and Laugh'd: And

And as amongs Chiefs here Brave healths went round. Their Trumpets did a chearfull musick found. When fair Flavira, as in Course arriv'd The Cup to her, had some excuse contriv'd: Or that it would not with her health conspire To drink beyond what nature did require. Untill a Health, to famous Lyle begun, To her was offer'd as it pass'd along: Who blushing could not chase but kindly so 1983 A The Liquor as this Health requir'd her lip. Which some observ'd, who little did suspect That love did, in her Vifage, bluft effect; And thought it caus'd from want of afe and Moen, all That this supposed youth was bashfull feen, As he to War mongst jolly Hero's came, I grand smed Some question'd if in Beauteons Man there were Form that with her smooth figure might compare: Or fingly wish'd that their chance fo should light, As they, in Bed, might folve their doubt that night. Supper

Supper well past, and time of rest being come, 28 L The better fort had Beds within that home: The But fo far straighten'd, as the most of those Did there with Bedfellows accept repole. Unto Flavira's lot a fole Bed fell, Because pretending that she was not well. Or was hers by the House-dam's special Grace, Who ready was t'oblige a Comely face. A transom Lattise did divide that Room, Where to another Bed one was to come, That had been to the gay House-Mistris known, And for her fake was not to lye alone. Her Husband next the carefully dispos'd To watch his house, lest if in bed repos'd. Some Camp retainers to these Persons might Imbezzell from the House his goods that night. Her Husband thus imploy'd, the Gayfull Dame To the appointed Bed and Lover came. But e're they fitted were for full Embrace: Her Jelous Husband, by a stealing pace,

Himfelf

Himself by Moon-light to the Room convey'd, And on Flavira's bed along he laid: Which well he knew might one Man lodging spare, And was convenient for his eye and ear. So zealous is Mans jealousy to find Facts that when known do most afflict the mind. The Virgin wak'd, and feared 'twas fome Man, By drink made ruleless, that disturb'd her then. And as the was refolving foon to rife, His gentle whifper he to her applies, Defiring she'd a while her self contain Within her Bed, and quiet there remain: If she, at his request, would prove so kind To him that fadly grieved was in mind. These words she heard-But could not their intended fense define, Or what he lying by her might defign: Till Judging that he did her Sex mistake, She feem'd to rest and to him nothing spake.

At

And heard the Jog's within his Wifes bed made:

Whilst ear he closely to the Lattise laid,

At which he figh'd, but figh'd with greater pain As he lov's motion heard renew'd again. Flavira wondering why the man thus griev'd. And judging he might be by help reliev'd: Naked, unto her smock, from bed she rose, Intending to put on her Manly Cloaths. When from the Amorous Wife the Gallant came, And clasp'd her round with a surprizing slame. The Virgin foon for her defence prepar'd. As thus he, in his shirt, to her appeared. When he by earnest words did much desire That she would now unto her bed retire; And not, whate're she guess'd, the fact disclose That had that time disturb'd her soft repose. His last request she grants, and smil'd in thought At the adventures which that night had brought. And next her habit for her March put on, That she from this bad quarter might be gone. How afterwards did Man and Wife agree, My Muse thinks no concern to her, or me.

5

H

N

T

B

T

A

A

V

T

T

N

Tho' fhe deplores the vices of that time, Too pronely then the Royal Parties crime. Strong in Recruits and Valiant force the King His Army did to fatal Nafeby bring. Not dismaller was Romes Theffalian fate. When Pompey there o'rethrown and Roman State. Then the Effusion here of Loyal bloud, By wicked Arms that King and Laws withstood. The Mornings * Queen foon clouded did appear, And feem'd her mournfull Purple Robe to wear; As she did her sad Throne Ascend that day, And faw the hapless King his Powers array. When Fairfax 'gainst him did Embattell'd stand. That Fortune might be won by armed hand: Who with his Chiefs accustom'd to success, Thought Stars their Rebell Swords did therefore blefs: When but permitted for a scourge to Crimes, That were their Nations in those horrid times. Now Heavens Omnipotent Pencil did in Skies Delineate marvells to observing eyes;

* Call'd Aurora by Poetical denomination.

By Figures, that to wonder did declare The just, and unjust Cause, of this vilde War: If, on Fames word, my Muse here aptly may Such Prodigies to future age convey. Three Mighty Shapes above did then appear, Vaster in Form then Constellations there: Whose Characters perspicuously were read, By large Inscriptions plac'd o're every Head: The First of these did Piety renown, Beauteous her Face, and wore a Diamond Crown: White was her Robe, yet brighter far then Rays Of Phabus when he finest them conveys. To Sov'reignty, which next to her did stand, She gave a Scepter from her holy hand: His Vesture such as on a Solemn day, Our Kingly Power and Majesty display. Tho' all the purfled Stars that it adorn'd, For earthly Glory, dark on fudden turn'd. Yet still his figure Royally look'd great, Like to King Charles when most distress'd by Fate.

Be

D

T

Ju

0

A

C

A

E

To wonder next State Order was beheld, Or fuch as under Sceptred Rule excell'd: Where Myter'd Dignity, by Sovereign Grace, Before all Civill has an honour'd place. And where in fev'rall Magnitudes appear Degrees of Nobless in the Royal Sphere. The short Rob'd next, who from the studied Law, Judiciall Reverence to their Science draw; On Seats of Judgments gravely feem'd to fit, And aid the Publick by their learned wit. Close unto these were seen the ruling Gown, And order of th' Incorporated Town; Where Royal Charters, God-like do Create The body Politiques Eternal State. Nor did best Science, or Mans usefull Art, Want in this Vision their becoming part. Or how from Kingly Rule their values rife, By honour given to Humane Industries. Oppos'd to Piety fierce discord stood, Her Monstrous figure cloath'd in Robes of bloud:

And feem'd to feed on Serpents as they hung Upon her Sanguine Person all along. Her hands did round th' Horizon Libells Throw, Worst seeds of ill when e're in States they grow. Furious her Eyes, and had a Throat fo wide As some thought Churches down it then did slide. To Aid her, proud Rebellion claim'd a part, Demure in looks and Speech, but base in heart : Various as Popular Sense, her Person dreft, And thus she lyes to Vulgar ears Exprest: Sifter to fame, Fame did her now allow, And gave this Gyantes a Trumpet too. A Crown she wore and on it stood upright A Sword, whose point seem'd to touch Skies to fight: Near to her side wild Anarchy did stand, The confus'd guide of worst disposed Man: Heads from her head and body feem'd to grow, Whilst her vast hands mongst Crouds did firebrands No humane measure could her compass take, For the was of the Devills Legion-make, Thefe

These Visions if to Allegory joyn'd, All without help of Verse their sense must find : Wherefore a while we'le leave 'em in the Air, And this fierce Battels deeds in brief declare. For challenge both sides fir'd their loudest Gun, E're here that early morning-fight begun; When foon their bodies fiercely did engage, That bloud might quench their hearts inflamed rage. Brave Rupert first the Foes Right wing does meet, And gave their daring Troups a quick defeat: Pursu'd, and kill'd beyond their Armies Rear, Which Victor like he boldly Summons there. But no return from them he could receive, Other then what their Cannon-mouths did give. Fully refolv'd, in spite of this bad cast, That Fortune's Nick would win for them at last. This valiant Prince, who in Wars daring Toyls Had to his Perill oft led foremost Files: Was destin'd more by onset to attain, Then his fucceeding Conduct could retain.

Which fad difaster had been his before At Edge-Hill Fight, but worse at Marston-Moor. And now had by attack dispers'd the Force Of Zealous Ireton's Phanatick Horse. And him his Captive did a while retain, Till from his fierce pursuit return'd again, He met with foes that forc'd him to refign The taken Ireton, and the field decline. But e're verse does such accidents display, That gave a period to this Fatal day: My Muse reserves, for Lyles especial Grace And fair Flavira's deeds, a fignal place. Whilst other valours, to contract our story, Are left unto more large Records of Glory. This Gallant Virgin from Loves power had chose A Warlike Room where Ranks did nearest close To a Batallion then Brave Lyles's Command, And fought to aid him with an armed hand: Whilst as she saw the perills of that Field, His dangers there she most concern'd beheld;

And when in doubt left he might want her aid, Her Soul, that else could not, was then afraid; So bravely did her mind Loves fear Imploy, Till she, to assist him, did Foes destroy. And as the now had his diffress perceiv'd, In Tears the fought and kill'd till him reliev'd. Whose valiant person having fallen to Ground, Enforc'd by weight of Blows and bleeding wound: She leaping off her Steed did him embrace, And being not known, perhaps then kis'd his face; Helping him foon unto his horse to rise, And guided next his way from Enemies. Heroick Lyle whom grief did Indispose Far more then toyls of War and hurts from foes: As then he weigh'd difasters of his King. And consequence which that days loss might bring. A Soldiers thanks to her he gave in brief. Conceiving her to have been some youthfull Chief That him reliev'd, and thus they Gallop'd on Till he loft her among the flying throng.

When furious Crommell had difpers'd this Wing. As he with blondy Swords approach'd the King: And flout Commanders had and Soldiers kill'd, That Furrows there with Sanguine streams were fill'd. When the Magnanimous Sovereign this beheld, And faw his powers by Subjects force compell'd, As Irrecoverable did appear the day; Yet he as Chief, and Soldier did affay His Men to rally, and with chearfull look Encourag'd them to stand the utmost shock. But how could Majesty or duty win Persons to fight when fear enforc'd their Sin. Who now, instead of stop, so rudely run As the King's forc'd to fly amongst their throng. So Boystrous waves an approv'd Ship convey, Against the Pilots will, to remote Sea. The Royal General thus compell'd to flight By those, tho' led by him, that would not fight: With fuch becoming Grandeur bore that fate, As suited Majesties afflicted State:

Or Prince, that of best Fortune ne're was Proud, And would not by adverse in Soul be bow'd. The wondrous figures that Spectators frood In Sky, (as here display'd a Scene of bloud.) And Order shew'd and Grandeur of his state, Now Trembled to behold this Battels fate; And after him, like Storms in Clouds, did fly, Untill obscur'd, to fight, below the Sky. But Piety, Heavens Influence on his heart, That in extremes was his confpicuous part; Above, as here describ'd, attends his flight, By his Soul feen, tho' not by other fight. Whilst Discord, Rebellion, Anarchy, that then Was hov'ring o're the Houses fighting Men, Did with their Iron-hands fuch Clappings make, As feem'd the Fabrick of the Heavens to shake. The Royal Infantry of aid bereft, As the Kings Cavaldry the Field had left: (Which Fate in mighty Battels does foreshow The valiant Foots ensuing overthrow)

Endeavour'd now by valour to repair The loss, howe're of Fortune they despair: As boldly they their Enfigns wav'd on high. And closing of their Files did foes defy. Brave * Lindsey, Ashly, Rusel, led their Ranks, And, tho' they wounded were, both Fronts and Flanks Had by their valiant Conduct long maintain'd. With other Chiefs that with them Glory gain'd. Stoutly they here their Enemies compell'd. And had, oft charg'd, their flying backs beheld. Till Fairfax led against 'em Horse and Foot, Whose Number more then Valour caus'd their Rout. Too tedious 'twere all actions here to tell, Or what by wounds or death the Brave befell: Nor fhall my Muse by Catalogue convey The Names or Sum of Captive men that day:

* The Earl of Lindsey, Lord Ashly, Noble Collonel Russel, all then Eminent Commanders under King Charles the First.

Let volum'd stories such particulars treat, Whilst her * Compendium does enough relate; That all the brave, by Heavens permissive doom, On the Crowns fide at Nafeby were o'recome. Of whom some Thousands hence were Pris'ners fent. And for the Houses Triumph after went Like Slavish Captives thorough London's Street, When foes durst there rejoyce their Kings defeat. Tho' this to Fairfax Honour may be faid, Howe're bad Cause, for Crime, to him is laid; That to the Conquer'd he was ne're unkind, But Gentle, as became Heroick Mind: If not so modest that to them his Mene gan of and and Was liker one fubdu'd, then Victor feen. 5 3.50 WOH. And had not wicked Men his Soul abus'd milbleid aid I By Counfells which they speciously infus'd: by liftid * A Method in all the Martial parts of this Poem chiefly observed, to avoid a prolix mention of Proper Names, the Clogs of Poetry, and are more properly enumerated by Historical relations.

From his Complyance no fuch Ills had been. That did Inhance his Armys bloudy Sin. Yet here, from verse, to give their valour praise, With the Encomiums Naschy's-field does raise: As became English bloud their persons fought. And marks of prowefs, to their fame, thence brought. Of whom the daring * Skippon did appear Highly renown'd for his Atchievements there: Who would not, tho' much wounded, leave the field, But fought till all, to give off fight, did yield. So bravely wicked were fome in that time, Whose fortitude was depray'd by their Crime; Or not fo happy from their Souls to know, How great a Sin was to their valour due. This Field thus loft th' unhappy King no more Display'd his Standards as he'd done before:

* He was Major-General to the Parliament Army, as is mention'd before in this Poem, and he was no less a knowing Commander, then valiant in Person.

Or with joy heard Drums beat or Trumpets found,
As dayly he his forces weaker found:
O'repower'd by Foes and routed every where,
Untill to aid him longer they despair.
When fome to Forreign Countries took their flight, 1001
Hoping, in future time, for him to fight.
With these Flavira did unknown retire,
If truth does rightly here with Verse conspire.
Where we shall leave her unto after day, and individe
When of this Heroin's worth we more shall say. oing?
Thus swiftly had the Royall Cause deckin'd, or want A
The Field first lost, and Garrisons next refen'd;
As them th' Enemy pleased to Command, belo sent
Or March'd to Force em by an Armedhand.
Whilst full distress'd the best of Kings could gain, not
No loofers Peace, which Subjects nowidisdain:
As they at Westminster did Votens fit and and bank,
And thought all Kingly Rule below their Wit.
Neglected thus he Oxford left at last,
And unto Scots Besieging Newark past:

When Noble * Bellace bravely did oppose Attempts of English and worst Scottish Foes. Untill his Sov'reign out of Prudence thought, Twas fit Scots there should not be longer fought. But have the Town furrender'd to their force. As for Crimes past they feem'd to own remorfe: And promis'd to allay the Houses heat, That their King might with them the gentler treat. To which effect the Scots did, for a space, Specionfly give their deeds fome Loyall face. As they to th' Houses applications made: And in dispute, on both sides, sharp things said; That words did feeming difference promote, Till mony came to give the casting Vote: For which the Scots foon fold their Gracious King; Whom Guarded back, the Houses Power did bring: And him to Holmby Pallace next remov'd, And kept by Presbyterians they approv'd.

* A Noble accomplish'd Person, now living, who Gallantly defended that Town against all Opposers.

But this their fawcy Army did refent, And * Joyce an Independant Cornet fent With fifteen hundred horse to sieze from thence The Royal Person by high Impudence. Thus to this Army was the King convey'd, And march'd their Prisoner till a Plot they laid: That turn'd him over to the Ifle of Whight, Where Curfed Hammond with a Jaylors spight. His King Imprisoned, in the highest Senfe we selected in Old Hermanders chara Of Subject turn d to Traytors impudence. And thus restrained he lived above a year 1000 hamen Lyle and I ucas nith their ends de Under vild Guard in Carifbrook Caftle there. Debarr'd from all best comforts his had been, Since hopeless then e're more to fee his Oucen? Or Royall Children whom Heaven did Enfort ted Vi For highest Glory of Monarchial Wille, Me ti bearing TO When nothing for his folace here remain'd, where and I But what his Piety from above obtain duol ed to dool The Laft of which compelled bent to obey

* Said to have been a Taylor by Profession by

But this their fawer Army did refert

The NINOTH BOOK! * bnA

With fifteen hundred horse to sieze from ione

The Royal Person by high Impudence.

Thus to this Armymentyment way'd,

In England, Wales, and Scotland Subjects rife, To free their King from Die at The Houses force dispose these to subduct the Houses force dispose these to subduct the Poet spares

Till when on Loves account the Poet spares

Verse, by which Rassinie neurical discount, anix sill And Old Hermanders character described. Socialistic for the Poet spares Flavira's Gallanty and Fate express d.

Fam'd Colchester surrander'd and their heeds but of Lyle and Lucas with their ends declar'd.

De bedsed the Bedse and sented the Bedsed Deedsed De Ope Complete the test sentenced on the Description of the Last of the Horseld on the Bedsed of the Bedsed of the Both of the House and the Both of the Both of the House and the Both of th

UT

onT

As Joyntly they their King a pris her made. And all possess'd of his they could invade. ... To fubdue next his Mighty Soul they strove, Whilst outward Comforts they from him remove; Not fuffering Friends, or spiritual men to pray Withhim, gainst bloudy ends, a Christian way. And when their Hellish spite this deed had done, They Fear'd his Contemplations most alone: Lest his Majestique Thoughts, and heavenly wit, Should in his words to Tax their Crimes be writ. On which account, they Pen and Ink deny, Tho' to the Sacred hand of Majeffy. Whilft thus their Evill deeds their King afflict, Heaven would by outward wonders them Convict: As by his holy Touch the Lame and Blind. Their * Cures from him Miracaloufly finde. The, like the world's Redeemer, he was then Rejected by the Crowds of faithless Men.

* That the King by his touch did cure fome persons that were brought to him, being Infirm, as above mention'd, during his Imprisonment in the Isle of Wight, was credibly Reported.

Whilest some admir'd that in his Zodiocks line The Sun could uneclips'd at that time Shine; When Royall Beams, far more divinely great, Obstructed were by Interposing Fate. Tho' virtually no Closure could withstand The Kingly Influence which he did expand Throughout his Nations, howe're Captive he Was made by guilt of arm'd Impiety. When many their Kings suff'rings did deplore; And some, who'ad been his Enemies before, Renounc'd the Houses Cause, and next contriv'd That by Fresh power their Prince should be releiv'd. Howe're, 'gain & prevalent Foes, the Outward Face Of war was Intermitted then a space. Tho' Loyall hearts disdain'd Pacifick hours, As their King liv'd reftrain'd by wicked powers. Whilest some from Noble forrow dy'd for Greife, Because despair'd their Soveraigns Just releife. Others unto their homes, in hope retir'd, As with their Freinds they Loyally conspir'd

F

B

A

V

C

٨

H

V

0

To arm again the most Heroique way, And by a Second war Oppofers flay. Thus had affairs some Monthly periods stood, And no Campaign fresh stain'd with English bloud. An Intervall in which verse does design To find out the retired Rosaline. Whom Lucas Love and valour Nobly free'd From the Intended Rape which was decree'd By Fierce Vanbralder, whom he bravely kill'd, And to her wish releiv'd her from that field. Who by her womans help found the abode, Of old Hermander, Standing far from Road: And to the Chase of Whittlewood adjoyn'd, Where he to quiet life himself Confin'd, Whose age compar'd, 'twas hard to finde a Tree, Within those shades, that older was than He. His abstinence prolong'd his wondrous years, Which harden'd were by his austerities. Oft Fasts he kept condoling wicked Life, And bloudy deeds, that time of Impious strife:

And to Chastise his body allways Lay 'Twixt hair-cloath Sheets, yet flept enough that way. Gen'rous by birth, and was by Bloud ally'd, As from our Muse his Mentions verify'd, Unto th' Attendant of fair Rofaline, Whose Care her Lady thither did design : Comely his Face, as fmooth there white and red, As when a youthfull Prime his vifage had: His hair nor Beard by age chang'd as they hung In locks that Curl'd unto his Bosome Long. Clear feem'd his eyes, yet could no fight retain, But when by wonder he did that obtain: At other times no glimps he faw of Light, Or object usuall unto humane fight. Yet could in shaded paths, to him long known, Near to his dwelling steadfast walk alone. Tall and erect his figure did appear, As he a comely Robe of Green did wear. With him had long a faithfull Servant liv'd, Who tho' both dumb and deaf the words perceiv'd

His Master utter'd, by whose Lips he knew, b'ebolisted If Speech-like moving, what he would bid him do. When first his kinfwoman had with him spoke, And told why thither the had undertook ing and and To guide her Beauteon's Lady, to whose fame a and be A Virtue and Love did Merit Joyntly claims and line Unto fair Rofalme he bowed Low, and ma 10 bus soil And his full wellcome did on her bestow one amout ...... Telling how he oblig'd was to that day, O ad daily By womans beauty the Refinest way. boarding and Tho' now no Leave unto his eyes was given A 300 To view her Feature, till the act of Heaven Should from those Orbs obscurity remove, only ale And manifest to her his wondrous Love w guiles no be Which in due time he doubted not to showard bear a That his efteem of her the thence might know. V. Jan Much she admir'd at what this person said in mood a And why to her he had address thus made : has entered And more because by age deprived of sight, with an ille He talk'd of feeing Beauty with delight.

But Judg'd 'twas best, however pass'd in Minde. From Time the meaning of his speech to finde. Wherefore beyond thanks, an obliging way. For her reception, little the did fay: And thus a while without his house they talk'd, Till handing of her kindly In they walk'd. Pleafant and Clean his dwelling tho' but finall, And rooms enough contain'd to ferve 'em all. Of which he One appropriated with Care, For pious use, and call'd his place of Prayer. A decent Altar on that Surface Stood Rais'd by his hands, and bless'd by him the wood. To this place first he guides his beauteous guest, And kneeling with her there some prayers addrest. Which done, to an appartment her he Led, That Neat was and contain'd a Handsome Bed. A Room within it whereher woman might Lodge, and be near her Ladies call at night: Telling fair Rosaline, that he had Chose That Bed to give her person soft repose:

In which an admir'd beauty once did reft, some souly A And at that word he three times Crost his Brest; Adding that he, for her fake, hop'd to find The Soul of Rofaline unto his kinde. I had we had sold These words unto the virgin seem'd yet more Misterious, then some spoke by him before. Wherefore she blushing ask'd him to dispense His meaning, and unriddle so his Sense. To which he answer'd, that as yet no power He had, that could prefage the hower; On which account the explanation must be A Be left to time, which might the deed Adjust: Wherefore he then no more to her exprest, And after Supper, brought her to her rest. Fully contented Rosaline was here; Who quiet valu'd above Coftly Fare. Tho' fometimes to make delicate her Food His Servant caught choice birds in field and wood, Thus had this Virgin past some Months away, Yet still did longer here desire to stay:

A place remote and whither none did come, and him me The Master Blind and Servant deaf and dumb And where unknown the might best thoughts enjoy. Not hearing when fierce War would more destroy. Betimes her Bed devoutly the forfook, And next of Natures Mirroun prospect took : 2501757111 More pleas'd then in her Morning glass to view Reflections, which could there her beauty shew. The early Lark the oft observ'd on high, As mounting he Sung Carrolls to the Sky. And faw how other birds did next awake, And their Love-Songs in Joyfull Couples make. Happy she thought these birds, that could appear, So like Immortalls, in an earthly fphear: Refembling as they Sing and as they Love, The Joys, by Bleffed Souls, perceiv'd above. But when she faw the furious Hawk affright These from their us'd abode and Lovers sight; And that in Air, as well as earth, liv'd Foes That could difturb the Mated hearts reposet 5.5 111 1 1

She fudg'd It might with her diffres compare, And what, for Lucas fake, oblig'd her Fear. Yet, this war ceas'd, the faw fome birds could meet. And for past dangers Chaunt their Lovers Treater all A May Heaven the wish'd fuch Blis for her ordain, And unto him she'd sing when met again. Thus feverall days the pass'd, till one did more Amuse her Soul then all spent there before. Which time Hermander met her in a Grove, And unto her again discours'd of Love : Letting her know that she had understood From him, in part, what now he should make good. If with him there a space she would remain, Till his Love's Secret might it felf explain. Much did the virgin his address resent. Doubting if modest were the Love he meant: Since she had heard of men tho' old and blind, That had warm appetites for woman-kind: And as she view'd his smooth atd Ruddy Look, Her virtue then afresh allarum took :

And thus concern'd she moving was away, Till on his knees He begg'd her longer stay: Which spoken, soon by them was heard around A Harmony beyond Lute's choicest Sound, And fuch as heaven might give to humane ear, If blest with musick of the moving sphear: When of the finest Substance of the sky, An Airy form descended to their eye; That first, Chimera-Like, appear'd to fight, Yet did, tho' Shapeless feen, their view delight? It's various Beams did most refin'd convey The Diamond, Ruby, and the Emralds ray: Till by degrees contracted was it's space, And chang'd to womans comely shape and Face. Her vest of Azure-Colour, like the morn, When Brightest Estearn Streaks her sphere adorn : Her amber-locks, unto her Bosome long, In shining Curls to admiration hung; And dallying with the air did feem to play, Like finest Gossamours in Summers day:

And as they mov'd was feen the Ivory white That in her neck's foft form difplay'd to fight? Whose presence did, by miracle, Restore Sight to Hermanders eyes, tho' blind before. Such wondrous Intervalls to him was given, On Love's account, by the fole Act of Heaven. Him she beheld, towards her his eyes did move had Kind as when they, time past, affered Love. To but The fomething more did her foft Beams Imply; wha Then Languishments of Love in Beauteous eye. Hal And fometimes blush'd, and sometimes smit'd a spacey WhofeBlush her smiles, whose smiles her blush did grace: More Gay then fuch on virgin Cheeks are feed on but On the first night within th'espouss'd bed mid thiv oT To kiss her Rosy Lips he did affay bed an abariM A As bashfully she seem'd to yield him way was H ned W But when he thought t'arrive unto that blis, on bank He could not feel the Lip he thought to kiss I vo aA Which she excus'd, and said no sense could finden sen'T The Method by which she to him was kinde.

A Secret that hereafter he'd perceive, When Heaven his Soul Eternity frould give. To Rosaline, who had devoutly kneel'd Since miracle, the Judg'd, this fight reveal'd, She kindly spoke, and bid her understand That she would Commune with her hand in hand: And thus a while this vision with her walk'd And of refined Souls divinely talk'd; Affuring her that Love could only be in Heaven polless'd by full felleity : Which the found there because her youth Thefin'd Patter Herhander with no earthly mind fluission W. And promis that, If the that Grace could Merit, To visit him, as thus beheld in Spirit sin Dan en nO A Miracle he had perceiv d before, Violand alide T When Heaven to fee her did his fight reftore; And from above had leave now to appear, notive that As by Hermander was defir d by prayer, ton linos old That the might unito her Sublimly tell poxo of dointy Whose Grace and Beauties mortalls much excell,

How she hop'd soon to meet her form bove Ibaix old Where no Fate could be Enemy to Dove onl sond sail But Rofaline, who'ad of Prognosticks heard, and sid of By holy Spirits faid to ave been declar dan trouns of T Doubting lest words by this bright vision spoke, H Were Ominous to her Loves mortall hope:
Which in his Loves bright vision the perceived. Whose tender Soul, not willing to allay And Heavenly Comfort had from thence received The wishes which she plac'd on future day; When the might Lucas fee from dangers free'd, And to her Bosom peaceably decreed; d'order sid unit Defirous was fome filel prefige to hear! . Intelled When foon this Beantedus forms differed to Air. of ?A Thus his difcourfredent officies Southe Even bib it as bnA At other times were heard that find by by beer by rent rent of A With pleasant street of the form of the street of the stre That in no Humane Speech in ore ever found against bank Which done Head abder Leads heroback again guitale R Where boldning the wind of the bold with the work of the bold with the b When Rosalidehad thesel stranger deeds attain Balliw bal Be fo pre britched adjusted ever the britched and of his world he had been a second and a second a second and a second a second and a second a second and a second a second and a second an

He kindly told med to meet her form to hook bligod and woll That fince she Leave did to her virtue give In his Society and some to Live ? The entertainment that he deem'd most great. He had Implor d as his divinest Treat: Which in his Loves bright vision she perceiv'd, Whofe tender Soul, not willing to allay And Heavenly Comfort had from thence receiv'd. An object that, till then, no other eye But his restor'd by wonder could espy the rad of but. Which Intervall fo fill'd him with delight www sucribed As he to fee her only Car'd for fight : I sid noof nod W Thus his discourse had of this Subject endbib it as bank Voices were hebrisk this drawerfe with Blenden eros voices With pleasant stories of his younger years agust dout a A And things most facile to diverbher Cares Hon nitsal T Relating how his wouth in war had been, enob doin W

Where bold he fought yet no wound received the . MA

And wish'd that her renouned Lover might alon noil W

Be so preserv'd when next engag'd in Fight.

...

But

But wishly told her, that tho' humane Minde To wellcome best events was most Inclin'd: Yet when no adverse-fate the Soul could ply. God-like appear'd it's then Security; And next, his prudence fuitably advis'd Her Guardianess, near unto him ally'd: Whom he oblig'd, should Martiall tidings Come To her, by means unthought of to his home: No fad Intelligence or actions to declare, That might provoke her Ladies Grief or fear. Since after he had Fasting Spent a day, That with more Zeal he for his King might pray : By Dream he bloudy Battles faw at night, And persons slain in cold Bloud after fight. Some shot to death, some Murder'd to disport Of Impious Men, and their Mock-Justice Court ! Where, to his horrour, he in Vision faw His King Condemn'd against Imperial Law. After which dream he little had defir'd To hear of War, or how bad men conspir'd.

Wherefore he did with caution her advise, Lest Rosaline were griev'd with Novelties, That she'd no Cruel fights to her relate, Or what, to him she Lov'd, might bode ill fate. To which his prudent Kinswoman reply'd, How the her Circumspection had apply'd, That no bad Tidings might fuch passage find. As should afflict her Ladies tender Mind. Tho' in due time by promise she must tell Great Lucas where his Rosaline did dwell; Howe're remote her person might reside From hearing Novells that might worse betide. Thus they express'd-Whilst, as by dream, Hermander was foretold. His Nation Wars Irruptions did behold. As * Hambleton had Scottish powers prepar'd, And 'gainst the Houses forces had declar'd

Hostility,

Duke Hambleton who before had been, for some Miscarriages of his or doubted Loyalty, Imprison'd by the King at Pendennis-Castle, and being after freed, march'd into England in the year 1648 and was taken, and beheaded soon after by the Impious High-Court of Justice, which wicked Tribunal had first Sentenced to death K. Charles the First.

Hostility, that the Imprison'd King; He might by Arms to Royal freedom bring. Brave Langdals Levies met him in the North. By Rifings Seconded which first brake forth In powerfull Kent, where Goring, Capell then, With Lyle, and Lucas, and renowned Men Were Num'rous form'd the Houses to resist, And by bold deeds the Royal Caufe affift. These Voluntary Files of Kentish force, Led by reputed Chiefs of Foot and Horse; Besides the Insurrections then begun In Wales, to aid what in the North was done: Occasion gave the Houses to provide, That to fight these their Army should divide; Who Fairfax to make War in Kent Injoyn'd, Whilst Cromwell to march Northward was design'd; But first to reduce Wales they him Imploy'd, E're by his Conduct Scots must be destroy'd: At Maidstone Kentish valour did exceed Wonders, which Martial Men in stories read:

When long there Fairfax Army did Affail, Before his powers by Fighting could prevail. And if a foot of Ground they feem'd to win, With greater fury 'twas forc'd back again. The Women here their Heroine Leader fought, And under her, like Amazons, then fought. Not Penthesilia, to assist Troy's King, So fiercely did her Warlike Females bring, As these at Maidstone, for their Sovereign's Aid, To repell Foes by Valour had affay'd. Whose dauntless feed in Girls and Striplings young, To fecond them, 'gainst daring force, did throng. Who with sharp Stones, instead of shot, some kill'd, And streets, where late they suck'd, with Foes bloud What eye could not have wept to ave feen this fight, Where Children did for bleeding Mothers Fight: And the fair Virgin, and young Beauteous wife, Dy'd, to ayd Fathers, or the Husbands Strife. As here from Evening unto Midnight past, Gainst Enemies, did bloudy Combats last:

Thus bravely they had long this Town maintain'd, Till from both Sexes Fairfax it obtain'd: Glad that his Trophees might that Glory share, Since women, brave as Men, oppos'd him there. Soon many Valiant did from hence Retreat, That they to make War might in Effex meet. Where Goring, Capell, had with Lucas joyn'd, And Levies, which to aid them were delign'd. Tho' much the loss at Maidstone did impair Th' Affistance they expected in this War. When many, dreading of the Houses Force, Declin'd to bring them promis'd Foot and Horse, That some held fit to take into Debate, Whether not Wifest then to seperate. And more recruits not Venture to obtain, After their first attempts in Kent prov'd vain. But Gallant Lucas, in whose Soul was found Courage, that did in Wars Extreams abound ; With some disdain such Counsells then did hear, That feem'd, tho' Wife, accompany'd with fear.

And with a Steady Confidence thus faid. Let Rebells be of their vild Cause affraid, And Prompt their wicked Senate to Confess. That Civill War was Voted wickedness: E're Loyall Man to oppose them should cease, Or, to give up his Sword, oblig'd by Peace: Unless he would a Tame Spectator live, On Slavish Terms, which such Dictators give. Or Pitiously his Kings restraint bewail, And Nation ruin'd, and yet not arm'd affail The Foes of Both: Let rather Stories fay That Lucas, 'gainst his Life, advis'd this day : Who is refolv'd, if but one Valiant File Of Militants shall company his Toyl; The Royal Cause shall not deserted be, What e're his Stars unhappily decree. When Goring, Capell, and brave Lyle did hear This Martiall Speech with all their Armed there: Like Men whom Mars, to wonder, had inflam'd, Their full refolve to do brave deeds proclaim'd.

And next their Valiant Chiefs, to quicken hearts, Declar'd their hope of aid from Northern parts; As Hambleton his March did thither guide, And promis'd had to aid the Royal side. In Effex many discontented were, And 'gainst the Voting Houses welcom'd War: After Imprison'd by their force the King, To whom for Peace they'd duly nothing bring. Incited thus, a hafty March they made, And Colchester well Strengthen'd with their aid: Refolv'd their Enemies there to withstand, And Conquer, when belieg'd, by Armed hand. Whose Garrison Numbers could not soon prepare Materialls for their bold subsistance there: No Granaries they, wanting Time, could fill, Or Magazins of shot that Foes should kill: Nor leifure had they Regular line to form, Whilst nobler Fortify'd to repulse Storm, On Courage they for their defence rely, Howe're assaulted by the Enemy.

When Fairfax foon his Army thither guides; Contriving, their diffress, all ways besides. And in his first Attempt perceiv'd the Town To bravely Man'd, by onset to be won. Where Goring, Capell, Lyle, and Lucas were, And famous Chiefs, who to increase files there. Like Common Militants, for Glory's fake, Did ranks of Foot and Horse more Gallant make. Which Fairfax finding, by Wars fafer mode, He timely straightens them with want of food. That Famine might force them to yield at last, Since no Hearts long can fight whose Mouths do Fast. Thus leaving him before this Leagur'd Town, My Muse a prospect takes of what was done By Cromwells Conduct, as he March'd through Wales. Where 'gainst the Valiant Welsh he soon prevails: And Gallant Owen, Powell, Laughorn, Poyer, With others fam'd, made Captive by his Power. Which being done, and full fubdu'd that Clime: His furious Soul does next delay no time.

That he with Scottish Hambleton might meet, And him in Field by armed force defeat. At Preston soon these opposite Armies fought, Where this Scotch Duke receiv'd a Totall rout. Nor could brave Langdail with his Loyall Powers, Joyn'd with this Peer's, prevail by bloud those hours : A When adverse Fortune had inclin'd to bring Ruine on all, that by War ferv'd their King. And more admir'd, because this battells day The odds of Number on the Kings fide lay. As hapless had some Risings been before. In Surrey made against the Houses Power: Which * Holland did, and Loyall Nobles Head, And with bloud lost were swiftly vanguished. So ominously did Stars that time conspire; As best Men were deprest, and bad rais'd higher. Thus Fatall War had Royalists undone A Second Time, and every Strong hold won * The Earl of Holland who as the Chief Commander Rose with the Duke of Buckingham his Brother the Ld. Francis, who was kill'd in that Action, and other Persons of Quality,

But Colchefter, where unto highest Glory The deeds of Heroes fix their Fame on Story; Full forty days had they been diffres d there. By all the Miseries of Cruell War: Their numbers much impair'd by bloudy Fights. And wasted by long hardships days and Nights. When Fairfax and his Mirmidons thought fit, That straits should force that City to submit: As Monster famine, whose hungry Hectic kills, And feems to eat, tho' her Gorge never fills, When her devourings Jaws and Bowells wast, And them compell to Pining deaths at last: Did by degrees her Ghaftly Vifage Spread In Colchester, where scarce was Meat or Bread: And could not long or healthfully fustain Valours, that nobly did that place maintain. To Forrage Fields they often foes affayl'd, And fustain'd lives as that way they prevail'd: When their bold Swords did food the Aged give, And Mothers, on whose breasts, did Infants live.

Some Virgins wept in Fear what would betide The Men to whom their Souls had been ally'd. Whilst other Females, more Heroique hold, To aid their Lovers durst sierce weapons hold: And like Virago's with locks loofly fpread On Naked breafts, and tuck'd up Vests did speed Their ready Courage to defend the Post, That then requir'd fuch fierce affiftance most. Thus bravely had they Loyalty endear'd. And neither Enemies Swords nor famine fear'd: Refolv'd whilft they life's finews could fuftain, Tho' by course food, no Force the Town should gain. Flavira now return'd from Forreign foyls, Where the experienc'd more her Martiall Toyls; And hearing of this City's fad estate, With what thence might unto her Lyle relate : By quickest means had gather'd Loyall force, Compos'd of Reliques of brove Langdall's Horfe, Which joyn'd with others that dispersed were, As Holland rose in Surrey to make War,

About an hundred Cavaliers in Sum, As from Fame's Lifts they to us Number'd come; Who deeming that she was some youthfull Chief Imploy'd to give the Royal Cause relief, Gladly did to her sprightly Conduct yield, As the to lead 'em had appear'd in Field: Discreetly cautious, as that time requir'd, When for Brave Deeds men fecretly Conspir'd. Whilst want of Circumspection oft did bring Ruine to fuch as Rose to serve their King. Her Trusty Black-a-Moor Page to Lyste she fent, Letting him know by Letter her intent Was, with that Party, t'wards the Town she led, To aid him there or leave her person dead. And where the posted Enemy she'd charge, And by her Prowefs march to him enlarge; Refolv'd that she, by day's next Early break, Would this attempt with her best Conduct make. Obliging him, whate're might her befall, That he'd her Name and Sex conceal to all.

This Message highly did Fam'd Lyse surprize, Her danger weigh'd, and fad extremities had The Town endur'd, which could not many hours, In all respects, withstand opposing powers. Yet much admir'd her Loyalty and Love, That would thus fignally their worth approve: Tho' with a Lovers great and tender Mind. He wish'd no Perills to her Glory joyn'd. But judging that she would not now recede From Acting what this juncture she decreed, As honour and Affections brave Effort, Did to her Soul with Fames best pride resort: Soon he determin'd, when she should Invade Their Common Enemies, that he'd her valour aid. Imploring Stars her person to defend, And make her Victress, tho' his Life they end. By help of Night his Answer to her came, Her Page in passing having Swam a stream; And now as foon as Mornings Blushing light Streak'd the Horison's Cheek; to Furious Fight

The dauntless Virgin led her Party on. And from the daring Foes had passage won : As Lyle to aid her boldly then affail'd, And thus both Lovers equally prevail'd. When to their Camp their fierce opposers fled, And of their Numbers left some persons dead. Impow'r'd by Victory these Lovers met, What Martial Glory e're appear'd fo great; Their greeting such, as in some glorious Field One Armed Chief would to another yield: When to endear their Valours prosprous toyl The heart rejoyceth as the Eye doth smile. Tho' Love tis fare did in their looks convey Some intermixtures of his kindest Ray. But how to serve her who such deeds had done For his Affection, and her Souls renown; Not less his thought Imploy'd, then caus'd his grief, As hopeless he judg'd Colchesters relief: Where food was wanted to support the brave, Whose Valours did that place to wonder save:

Doubting

Doubting lest fair Having there might find Distress, which above all would grieve his mind. Howe're his Soul did figns of Comfort place Upon his looks, for joy to fee her Face. Whose kindness with such Grandeur could appear. As the might least his straits or perill fear. And now, as they retir'd towards the Town, Discoursing of some deeds in War were done: The Enemy did force in Ambush lay, To Cut off them as they withdrew that way: Furious the Conflict was, as Love did Guide, And Noblest Valour Engaged on their side. When fometimes Lyle did fighting interpofe 'Twixt her and peals of shot, and Swords of Focs. Whilst she, his wond'rous Courage to requite, Her Person him defends by dang'rous Fight. Fame tells that she, by Combat then in Field, Had a Fifth-Monarch brawny Champion kill'd: And how an Antinomian's Head she lopt, That for a space upon Earths surface hopt.

Which feen the Amazed Enemy retir'd, and and i And at more distance his lowd Musquets fir'd. These Acts she did, and doubtless more had done. Had not a shot, too dismally was strong, Her Armour pierc'd and body by its force. That dying she was falling from her Horse; Till Lyle, full griev'd, had staid her on her Steed, At which her Soul reviv'd with so much speed, As her Arm closely did his neck embrace, And feem'd to kifs him with her dying face. Aftonishment and forrow fill'd his breast, More then by words and Tears could be exprest: In which fad posture back with her he mov'd, Her fnow-white arm yet circ'ling him she lov'd. But as he stood oblig'd by her request, Refolv'd that uuto none should be Confest Her Name and Sex: and next as Time gave leave. With Decency convey'd her to her Grave; Whate're account the future Age may gain Of this fam'd Heroine bury'd thus or flain.

E

S

I

(

I

So Fatally had Love a period here : d shem the When foon the worst extremities of War The Town endur'd, as want of foods support Enfeebl'd Nerves of Heroes and th'Effort Of bravest Militants, who now Lament That they can't longer keep Curft Famines Lent; And that the hungry Housewife Nature should So meanly Humane Composition Mold; As unfed Bowells might the Soul diffres, Altho' Immortal, when for food they press. Thus had Complain'd the Valiant late and strong, Impair'd by Fights and Hunger fuffer'd long: And faw their stoutest Soldiers Famish'd dye; Jan 3 A Or kill'd, near starv'd, when fought the Enemy. The Steed that had couragiously before His Gallant Rider in fierce charges bore, Now fall'n in Creft and shrunk in Body stood Imploring, of his wanting Master, food. Who then instead of yielding him relief, Whose strength by routing Foes had fav'd his Life, Ingratefull made by Famines rigid Force. Murders, to feed himself, his belov'd Horse. Yet even this food too foon their Persons frend. That fuff ring did thus Colchester defend : When Carcasses of Steeds that tainted lay In Fields, where flot did them and Riders flay, By Force they feize, their Valour to fustain, Till this vild Meat no longer they could gain. Thus Famine, still encroaching, them Compell'd On Warlike Terms anto their Foes to yield. Which Fairfax did Indefinite Mercy call, Tho' by their coment not then meant to all: As that false Court of War condemn'd to dye. Brave Lyle and Lucas, to their Infamy. The wicked Ireron whose fabtle Tongue, And Pen, had Mischiefs dispers'd all along; Demureft feem'd, with his White-Liver'd Face, When his Soul Bloudy ends defign'd apace. And 'gainst these renown'd Chiefs had Impious spite, Because their Conducts worsted his by Fight:

Whose

Whose wiles had now his easy Gen'ral won To kill these Heroes in Cold Bloud with Gun. Thus Cromwell whilft he Manag'd other War In Ireton had his Cruel Deputy here, Who with his bold Affociate Miscreants lay'd The Tragick Scene which Colchester display'd: And unto Englands lasting shame could kill Their fellow-Natives by their Merc'less will. Whilst Goring, Capell, for succeeding fate, Must on the Houses dismall sentence wait. These Noble persons, Great in Soul and Birth, Strove to o'recome, when Men, the shame of Earth, Their King Imprison'd, and by wicked Guilt The Bloud of Subjects barbaroufly spile: Whilst they, from perfect Magnitude of mind, Were more then Stars to aid their Monarch kind. And should disloyal Arms still prosprous prove, Refolv'd the Conquer'd Cause they'd dying Love.

Or if enforc'd at Lawles * Bars to stand, They'd defy Rebells without Armed Hand: Deeming if there vilde power their death design. 'Twould Honour add unto their Noble Line. Brave Lucas first must by their direfull rage Be brought to dye on their appointed Stage: By Starrs defign'd his Theatre of Fame, Where his last act most Elevates his Name. Serene and Resolute appear'd his Brow, As when in Fields he fac'd the Armed Foe; Or from disastrous War endur'd distress, That could no Greatness of his mind suppress; Who thus beholding the Commanded Files Ordain'd to kill him by his Enemies: And how amongst spectators some there were That for him wept, whilst he did shed no Tear.

With

I

* This referrs, for want of other Room in this Poem, to the Tryalls of these two Peers before the then pretended High Court of Justice, which was Subsequent to the death of King Charles the First, when Goring Earl of Norwich was sav'd (as was thought) by the favour of Lenthall, Speaker to the Farliamentary Usurpers, but the other, the Lord Capell, Sentenc'd to death, whose Heroick Speech and End is well known to Story.

With an Erected Countenance thus faid, Death's ghaftly prospect no surprize has made In Lucas, who would not by Mercy Live, If Begg'd to take it, which the guilty give. Nor can their Guns or all their pointed Steel, Give me more wounds then gladly I would feel: If killing me they would their Crimes relent, And to their Injur'd King, on Knees, repent : Then bids 'em boldly shoot against his Breast, Whilst in his Looks such courage he exprest, As Valiant * Scava did for Cafar's fake, When he by Num'rous shot did Life forsake. Next whom, frout Lyle his Tragick Scene must end, By the same Guns that slew his Valiant Friend. Death he before had wish'd, as he beheld, In Cruel Fight, his Dear Flavira kill'd. And had from Loves Impulse then sought to dye By desp'rate charges of the Enemy:

* A Famous Commander under Julius Cæfar highly renown'd in Story for his extraordinary Atchievements and Fortitude at his death: to whom Heroick Lucas may be defervedly parallel'd.

Had not his Loyalty and publique Spirit, Been more endear'd by him then his Loves Merit. Not much he spoke, resolv'd that Actions more Should win on hearts, that would his worth explore: Aud witness how brave Subject and best friend In him conspicuous were to his Lifes end: Who as he Lucas body did perceive, Lying near the place where death he should receive, Often he kiss'd his friends yet dying Face. And whilst he kifs'd his Eyes shed Tears apace. Then with expanded Arms their shot receives, As his last word his Murtherers forgives. Thus dy'd these Chiefs, above what verse can blaze, At least such here, as would Inscribe their praise Longer then Sculptur'd Lines in Marble tell, How Gloriously at * Colchester they fell.

* Where King Charles the Second soon after his Restauration, in Honour of their Memory, erected a stately Monument.

o Gen, also, defeated the fell Movell cold blood and I, by Conquering Rebell

Conferenced of Non

The TENTH BOOK.

The Argument.

Wars last great stake at Colchester thus won,
The Bloudy Armies Insolence Improves,
As on the Houses Members they Impose,
And violate the Treaty with the King.
In shape of Friend the Devill Cromwell Tempts
By wickedest Ambition to aspire.
The Traytrons Court and Characters describ'd
That Murder'd by their Doom K. Charles the First.

HE Army Leaders who by Faithless guilt
Had Cruelly Heroick Bloud thus spilt:

Soon found how English hearts their deeds did hate,
And wish'd the Authors an accursed fate.

T'Imprison'd King, whose Soul had hop'd to hear

Some happy progress of that surious War,

(Which his Brave Subjects for his Scepters Aid

And pers'nal safety Loyally had made)

Too foon, alas, descern'd the sad Novell That told what them and Colchester befell. And how the Valiant Lyle and Lucas were. In Cold Bloud kill'd, by Conquering Rebells there, Heroick Capell, Goring, and of Fame A many Chiefs whom verse here needs not name, Forc'd to furrender and attend the will Of Tyrant Subjects as they'd fave or kill. Which Tydings Hammond by the Juncto made Their Sovereigns Jaylor, boaftingly convey'd: In hope that Grief his Kings Soul might depress, As his Tongue durst these Horrid facts express. Whilst Guns, for wicked Joy, from Carisbrook Towers, And shouts of Foes divalg'd these dreadfull Hours. The Royal Breast where streams of forrow flow'd, Above what Parent e're for Children show'd, Piously did in Secret Thought complain That he should Live, at that Time, King in vain:

* A Castle in the Isle of Wight in which the King was then in Prison, and bad been there Restrain'd by Hammond for several Months before.

Since Heaven did not his Sword and prayers allow Mighty enough the wicked to fubdue. Whilst grievously restrain'd, he heard the Sounds Of his best Subjects deaths, and Kingdoms wounds. Wishing that Heaven had his Lifes end decreed. When Bravest Men for his just cause did bleed At Keinton-field, or Naseby's Fatall Toyls, Where as a Soveraign Chief he led bold Files. Or if Clandestine Fate must be his doom, Why did not * Rolph to kill him fooner come, Or was discover'd e're his Piistoll shot King Charles had ended by their shortest Plot; Then to their shame let him surviving see A longer feries of their Villany. Happier he thought was Second Edwards fall. Or Richards, next to that, deplor'd by all:

This Heinous Traytor had been employ'd by some of the Army to Pistoll the King in Carisbrook-Castle, where he was restrain'd; but as he endeavour'd to make two Gentlemen his Affistants, that there attended on the King, he was discover'd, and accus'd by them: but in that wicked Time found favour enough to save him from death contrary to his demerit.

Since by a quicker guilt, usurped Power Forc'd on their distress'd Lives their dying hour. So Seldom prison'd Monarchs period have Other, then Murder'd laid within a grave. Yet how'ere dreadfull unto humane fense, Such terrors might their dismall shapes dispense, He Judg'd, in Prince, 'twas next the Sin of Fear To apprehend Fates steps, however near; If Impious Men who had no right to Live, Could killing power unto Deaths Scepter give. Refolv'd, what'ere his foes 'gainst him design'd, His glory to his Soul should still be Joyn'd: Confirm'd by patience full to undergo, What Royall fortitude could fuffering show. And as these words unto himself he said, A Circling Flame around his head display'd; If not fome brightest Angells spreading wing, That did to him Cælestial comfort bring. As thus the King divinely great here spent Severest hour's of his Imprisonment:

His Loyall friends, far more concern'd then he. Fear'd that their Soveraign would foon Murder'd be: As Fame's bold Tongue dispers'dly did relate Deeds that Conspir'd with that sad Juncture's date. And as fwift means fuch horrors did convey, By Fatall accident they pass'd a way That near was unto Rosalin's abode. Where then her Woman walking on a Rode, Had met a Passenger that did declare How Lucas dy'd and Lyle at Colchester. She having been by Wife Hermander taught That by her means no Tydings should be brought Unto her Lady, that her heart might grieve, Or worst of wounds for Lucas death receive. This prudent Female having these words weigh'd; T'amuse fair Rosaline, on purpose made A ftory, that no other stress display'd, Then that great Lucus was by Foes decree Banish'd his Country for his Loyalty.

Having

Having on purpose so contriv'd this Tale, As't did not only Lucas death conceal, But to her Lady apt occasion give To travel, where she thought he yet might Live. When Rosaline did graciously Address All that her thanks and wonder could express Unto Hermander, bidding him farewell; And next declar'd fhe was refolv'd to dwell By choice an Exile in Outlandish Clime, Hoping abroad to hear in happy time Of her Lov'd Lucas: where her womans Care Long kept fad Truth from coming to her ear. But how her person she dispos'd when known His fatall Loss, or how she did bemoan Her Lov's Misfortune, verse can't fully say, Or in what Cloyster was her ending day. Thus Noblest passions deepest did deplore The Impious progress of Usurping power: Whilst in this Nation no Just state of Life, But did Lament that War's prodigious strife.

When Haughty Cromwell did in Embrio Lay Aspiring thoughts, to rise a future day. If he could first his Soveraigns Life destroy, And next by Bold degrees his Throne Injoy. To aid which ends he Bloudy Men Cajol'd, That for King-killing were alike him Soul'd. But these thoughts caus'd some strugling in his breast, As guilt of Conscience would have them supprest; Tho' at a time when his proud heart was Swell'd, By routing the Scotch * Duke, and rifings quell'd W Throughout the Nation, which the Royall fide int Did unfuccessfully that Season guide, animal attent One Evening as he Towards London went, Pondring past deeds and what to come he Meant: His Inward horror did his Soul affail, with on bin bnA And 'gainst his dire ambition did prevail So far, that now his haughty Minde did yield To force of Conscience all his Bosom's field.

* At Preston in Lancashire, where Duke Hambleton was defeated by Cromwell in the year 1648.

And as he thus awhile had walk'd alone Near to a lofty Grove perceiv'd by None: Fix'd to the Ground, on fudden, his feet feem'd, As he upright then stood in trance, or dream'd; Amaz'd his looks, erected was his hair, Like one that did some dismall object fear. When for more wonder round him figures stood, That from their Bosom's t'wards him spouted bloud : Like freams that from the Marble Image flow. Whose Sculptur'd shape does some fam'd person show. Their vifage refolute as he had beheld Them fighting, or in furious Battle kill'd. But as amongst these he did * Cavendish view. And faw the wounds that his brave person flew; And call'd to mind the whisper that he gave Which caus'd the death of this Illustrious Brave; As he unhors'd Surrounded was by Foes, And stead of quarter received killing Blows:

* Which Noble Gentleman was faid to be kill'd by the Secret Intimation of Cromwell to his Souldiers, when he might have far'd his Life.

Unto remorfe his Soul did him affright, And feem'd to wish he never more should fight. Admiring that throughout his wicked part. No Sword or Bullet had yet Plns'd his heart. Thus far did strength of Conscience over-rule Horrid Delignes of his Afpiring Soul, Inciting him to hate his former Cant. And Specious guilding of his black Intent. Whence he might Simulations past deplore, And vow by which he promis'd to reftore His Gracious Soveraign when at * Redding he Weeping affur'd that act of Loyalty. Whilst Conscience thus her Ensigns had display'd, And by refiltless Onlets victrix made: He thought he now could happily awake, When all these figures that before did take

Asto his Entrellation

* At which place Cromwell having formerly feiz'd the King by his Contrivance at Holmby, where he was kept and attended by Commissioners of the then Parliament, he folemaly engaged at Redding to restore him: Insomueh as this afflicted Prince said openly, if Cromwell had a Soul he should be restor'd to his Throne.

Their Sanguine Station to affright his eyes. By faddest Instance of their Tragedies, Appear'd no more, nor had left figne of Bloud Where he thought they had round him bleeding food. At which rejoyc'd, on Bended knees he pray'd That their death's guilt might not on him be laid. And thus his Crazy Conscience for a while Past deeds resented, and the wicked Toyl Defign'd by him in future, 'till his eye, As he was kneeling, did to wonder fpy A Throne, that from Earths Bowells feem'd to rife Adorn'd with all Majestique Dignities. At which, tho fomething penitent in Trance, He could not chuse but cast a Liquorish Glance. As when a Wolf does fee his belov'd prey. He Licks his Jaws and turns his Eyes that way; Altho' his Entralls had been Clogg'd with store Of Carnage that he had devour'd before: So did this Man, as he the Throne had view'd, Aud from that Object appetite renew'd.

But as he faw the Bloudy streams and Rills, That fprung from Vales as well as highest hills, Till Joyn'd in Current, 'twixt him and the Throne, They in a Crimson River seem'd to run. This Vision more then t'other him affrights, Who thought it caus'd, to tempt him, by Hells sprights. When three times a strong voice bids Cromwell come, And boldly feize a Royal empty Room. I can't, he answer'd, and behold this Scene Of Horrors, to my Conscience, Intervene. Then Conscience, not Ambition is the Choice Of Haughty Cromwell, Laughing faid this voice. Next personated unto him appears, And with a * Friends embrace this Chief endears: Having in Soul, a Patriot been, some fay, and and and That had in Body fought a certain day had aid gequi

* The Devill who in the shape of a dead friend, more to Infinuate his Execrable Delusion and Temptation, is thus supposed to have appeared to Cromwell.

At Chalgrave-field, and there did wounds receive That did his Mortal life a period give: Bidding the Mighty Crommell from him know, That there was no fuch thing as Hell below: Or Malefactor damn'd at Pluto's Court, Which he affur'd, and smiling made his sport At all such Tales; Nay ask'd him if he thought. As he his figure freely to him brought. That Souls had ever felt Infernal pains, Or in Hells Newgate dragg'd about their Chains. Who without leave, if call'd by Grand Import, Can to aid Mortalls Night and Day refort. Then handing Cromwell, howe're yet in dream, Boldly Conducts him o're the bloudy ftream; Bidding him look if Sanguine Tincture lay Upon his person as he pass'd that way. The Chief admir'd to see on him remain No fpot, as he through Bloud of Thousands sain

Had

Had thought he mov'd; and to the Feind declar'd That Fopp-like Dreaming he had Conscience fear'd; Which never more enfeeble should his mind, Or from his Speech a Nomination find, Other then as he'd fpeciously Cajole Such Factions, as for ends, he meant to Fool. Then swell'd in heart upon the Throne he fits, Where being Rob'd, Hells sprights, like to some Witts Whose eloquence did him in future treat When he with Grandeur took his Princely feat: In Long and Short Robes did they Reverence pay ; As fome did there both Canting fpeak, and pray. A Monstrous Register of Hells vast size, That was to Book and Proclaim destinies, Which by Fates Rigid Sifters had been fpun; To Crowds of Ghoft, with a hoarfe Gyants Tongue Declar'd, the English Nation to despight, That Mighty Noll, the darling Son of Night,

After

After his horrid deeds did height obtain, Jings 1 Should Bloudily Five years Protector Reign. Which words pronounc'd, Dark Vapours overspread The Surface, with which Mist-like vanished of the The Throne and Visions, as himself he found Stretch'd out, like to dead Corps, upon the ground. Till waken'd from his Trance, by some such Wind As bluftring * Eolus did for him find, When on his dying day the tumbling Sky Did rowl his Soul to fad Eternity: Upright he boldly stood, and hop'd the Noise Did but resemble future Cannon Joys: Which from this Vision he judg'd should succeed, As he refolv'd to heighten wicked Deed; And by his daring Spirit Ghofts affright, If they should him deterr by day or night.

Like

H

E

A

H

A

A

So

A

T

H

H

A

* Poetically taken for the God of Winds; and by the subsequent Verses is here Intentionally describ'd the prodigious Tempest at the death of this horrible Usurper.

i nt

ce

oavi.

Like one, whose fortune and his utmost good Could have no other. Fond then deeds of Bloud. To dispose persons for his purpose fit, you may spoils of Majesty soon seize. He well Cajol'd the Men of Impious Wit: toalt at will in Royal Palac But most the Arm'd, of whom then many were That o're their Nation strove to domineer. But left they frould not to his methods Bend, As to afpire above them was his end, I nwond bus normal He covertly does that Ambition Guide. S brammo Dbn A And feem'd but Instrumentall to their Pride; and As their bold Power should King and Laws take down, And be Joynt Sharers of a Conquer'd Crown. deed fuch powerfull rule v Soon with him Ireton, Lambert, Harrison joyn'd, And others that as heinously combin'd: To whom this falfest Man, thus Glozing spake; How great I would your approv'd Valours make Heaven is my Witness, as I zealous prayswesigned And feek God with you our feelected way:

Z 3

If

If words of mine can prompt you to be wife, And from Inferior Orbs to higher rife, As you may spoils of Majesty soon seize, And feast at will in Royal Palac Where your brisk Wives with an exulting flame Shall you Embrace, and in their Queens Beds Teem. Church and Crown Linds we will make spoils by force, And Command Senats by bold Foot and Horfe: If first the Soveraign owners bloud be fpilt, And Itead of us, on him laid this Wars guilt. From which bold deed fuch powerfull rule will fprin As shall have Rife from us without a King. These words when heard by men who before fought How vile designs might be to Issue brought, Like Harpies waiting for a Lufcious prey, Agreed to fill their appetites his way.

Who

Who tho' their Masters with the King then were In * treaty to prevent all future War; And near obtain'd fuch grants as without shame They could not Royal Condescensions name; When they ask'd more then Subjects did become, And left for Kingly Rule a narrow room; As Arm'd Usurpers they all Methods break, And once again their King a Pris'ner make. Next purg'd the House of Members that did own Complyance by their Treaty with the Throne. When a Caball of Traytors left behind, Of their vilde Senate, horridly combin'd How a Prodigious Court they might devise, That should the Murder of their King disguise: By fuch pretexts as fub'tly they'd Infuse, And that way People, the deed done, Amufe.

* Which was held with the King in the Isle of Wight by Commissioners from the Houses, notwithstanding which his person was seiz'd in the time of treaty by the force of the Army.

That fam'd * Appartment where to ferve the State. yn happy times oft Lords and Commons Met. And to their Loyall Glory did Confer. On means to make Kings great in Peace and War: Gave now reception to a Crew of Men, Whose figures Liken'd Feinds in Pluto's den: When in their difinal shapes they Councells Joyn, And vent with Forked Tongues their black design; Whilst from Earth's deepest Caverns winds arise That Sigh as they'd Alarum Earth and Skys, By telling how Hells Boldest Imps Imploy Wit, more then usuall Wicked, to Destroy. The Bloody Cromwell, in whose Direfull Face His Nations Fatall Comet feem'd to Blaze, Had Impious Men Inroll'd that by his skill Were guided to advance his Monstrous will.

* The Painted Chamber in Westminster the usual place for Parliamentary Conferences.

Ireton his Gastly Son in Law Accurst, I and admend on W Prepar'd their Regicidall plotform first; When Harison, a Butchers Son by Birth, Cruell by Nature like these Sons of Earth, and and off And in Cold Bloud, as fame his figure draws. Instead of Beasts slew mento Glut his Cause: Maintain Thought he possess'd deservedly a Chair was bill Amongst fuch Regicidall Patriots there and wovA With whom had close Caball'd the Plodding Vane is bak. Who had more Subtile Theorems in his Brain 10 10 Then Schoolmen teach when Ubi's they define, and A Or Entities which no Space can Confine. From some such refin'd Sistems perhaps He olods and T Refolv'd that Rules of State Immense should be. I tail And if the Soveraign Power were laid afide, risul va Defign'd no order Lender thould abide be a see Land Then the Ideas of his Brain should please, That with no Government could be at cafe. And you!

Who

Who thought the Pop'lace but his Lump of Clay, Which he'd, Promethens like, still mold his way. And was for Pious phrase and Mene admir'd No less then if the Man had been inspir'd. Whilst Scot and Martin who did not pretend By Inspiration Men or State to mend, Did from their Vicious Taint and Lawless Soul, Avow that Change was Luxury of rule: And thought new Government was like fresh Choice Of Women they'd Lasciviously rejoyce. And as this Lustfull Tenent they explor'd. In fancy they with the Republick whor'd. Thus these debanch'dly had their Wit employ'd That the best King and rule should be destroy'd, By fuch pernicious Maxims they'd convey, And Martin us'd at this Courts Meeting day: Letting 'em know that in lowd Vulgars Name They must their Sovereign, e're destroy'd, desame;

And if the Charge, by which King Charles shall dye, Be call'd the Peoples, who dare fay we Lye. Well. Answer'd Harrison, thou hast devis'd, desired For which thou Merits to be rebaptiz'd Amongst the Godly unto whom I Preach, and bad ba A And to asperse the Man did such words teach. Nor can ought * blacken more his Rule and Fame, Then to fall Charg'd in the Lowd Peoples name. Thus they conspir'd as each here took their feat. Where Regicides with plandits them did Greet: 101W And fully Number'd, by their Mutual Vote: Did Bradshaw their grim Prefident promote; mil 2001. Whose pettyfogging Genius foon embrac'd and and w That wicked Grandent howe're Law debas'd. To vertise A Which tells that if work Came be gainful found. Twill want no aid from Malefactor Gown'd.

* The very wicked Expression that Harrison was charg'd with at his Tryal when Condemn'd for this Execrable Treason.

Hugon in Black Coat like Hells Peftor there, As Feinds, 'tis faid, fometimes that Livery were, Diffembling of a Golpell Mene and face, which Pray'd for their fakes without all fense of Grace. And had 'twas thought by help of Witches spell, Who was his Punck, tho' Succubus to Hell, 1004 at but Convey'd with Scripture fuch Prestigious sense, As more Inflam'd their bloudy Impudence. This vast stupendious wickedness thus lay'd, Whose Horrors did all Loyall hearts Invade, And like worst prodigies that Men amuse, with villed by More then unufual terrors did Infufe; When fome by grief were Metamorphis'd fo. As they Gray-hair'd before their time did show: More ftunn'd with forrow then in that fad day When London in vast heaps of Cindars lay, And Crowds by Millions did with dread retire To Fields, where Bedless they deplor'd the fire; Hopeless ria Sville

Hopeless that from her ashes e're should rise A Fairer Phanix to delight their Eyes. In Zeal to Westminster a many went, At Sacred Tombs of Sovereigns to Lament. Doubting that Foes presumptuously would be With Royal Reliques there at Enmity. Or worse then Goths or Vandalls soon destroy Repose which dust of Monarchs did enjoy. Tho' to their wonder each Effigy'd Face Of Kings should weep, to pitty this King's case: And the Fam'd Virgin * Queen with Blushes shed Tears, in her figure, on her Marble Bed. One Man that Night who from devoutest Zeal Found means a while his Person to conceal. Address'd to Holy * Edwards sacred Shrine For Saint-like aid unto the Royal Line:

Majoffy, and noxb &

When

* Queen Elizabeth.

* King Edward the Last of the Saxon Monarchs, and for his Holiness of Life Sirnam'd the Confessor.

When he conceiv'd a Voice thus to him faid. Heavens high permissive will must be obey'd. Nor think Great Charles less Glorious shall dve Then Martyr'd for his steady Piety. Whose Faith, tho' not call'd by Catholique Name. Shall have a Univerfall Christian Fame. And from the Merit of his Sacrifice Agrandiz'd shall the English Scepter rise; And in a Second Charles and James dilate Above what e're in Brittish King was great. These accents utter'd, or else fancy'd fo. As Thought fometimes may future things foreshow. This devout person from the shrine retir'd, And as Heavens words th'Imagin'd speech admir'd. Thus holy Men fought Comforts from above, Whilf Impious hearts were eager to remove The Life of Majesty, and next that deed Settle a Deform'd Rule without a head.

Cromwel.

Crommell, whose Cous'ning face could Laugh or Cry, As Grave or Comick was his Villany. With feign'd Humility did them defire. Not in the least to judge he would aspire. But serve their Common ends, like one that fought To raise their State, whilst he no greatness sought; Who to no Annalls did pretend or Line. That could him more then private Life affign : Wishing his Wife and Children might partake No Bleffing, if fincere he did not speak. Thus he allur'd 'em, whilft his Inward Soul Smil'd to think how he'd their Ambition fool. And now their Bloudy Court presum'd to sit, Where Bradshaw Mouth'd what he and they thought fit: Like Judge to Pluto was he feated there, And Men, that Feind-like his Pack'd-Jury were. Furious his looks, his Gown high Crimfon Red, Who fate for Bloud and fuitably was clad.

If Poets past had like this heard of Court, Their Indignation had rais'd their transport Beyond what they of Stygian Monsters tell, Whose loathsom rout Tribunails fills in Hell; And had, instead of those, to us describ'd The Representment by Imps here Contriv'd: Since never of Hells deeds, or Earths 'tis read, That Goblins there or here so Judg'd their Head. Yet worse then such this wicked Court durst do Gainst the best Prince till then the World did know. Th' Excellent King being brought unto this place. Where none of them deserv'd to see his face, With reason, as Majestique as his Cause, Paffl'd their Sense, and shew'd to them his I But this must not confute their horrid Crime. However Monstrous left to future Time:

When

When foon their Haughty * Minos did reply That they could O'rerule pleas of Majesty, By power, which they held much a finer thing Then yielding due submission to their King; Yet could not better reason for it give, Then that it might with Vagabond Commons Live; As these course representatives in fact allow'd, Who had no other title to their Crowd. Whilst their Sollicitor, Sputtering Cook, did plead, That Justice was by them too long delay'd: And of his Lordship much did it intreat, To make their farce-Tribunal feem more great. As thus Currs did the Royal Lyon bait, And by their forked Tongues design'd his fate, Far more Inglorious then the pointed steel That Cafar did from Romes pack'd Senate feel.

belbuleneD

* Feign'd by Poets the Judge of Hell, and may in some fort refemble Bradshaw President of this wicked Court.

None there was found that durft by Loyal Speech This horrid Courts high wickedness Impeach: Untill a * Lady did with Grandeur fay Words, that her Husband should have own'd that day. By which, she did, unto their guilt, imply Their bold Contempt of Royal Dignity. So far the Woman did the Man out-do. Whose power could not correct their fury now. Above Treasons height this Court soon Sentence pass'd, Deeming time long whilft their Kings Life did laft: That at his end, Regalios of the Throne, o. 1 110, 10 bnA By Sacrilege before that time unknown, and of Might with Church-Rapines to them Incom's vield. As if the spoils of Heaven they'd won by Fieldi and bank The Rebell Soldier who from Thirst of Gold, stom Thir And Lawless power, thought conscience richly sold, 'T

Conducted

* Wife to the Lord Fairfax, General of the Army.

(355)

Conducted by the Scum of Humane-kind, That on State Ruine had their rife delign'd; By found of Trumpet and by beat of Drum Prepar'd for Triumph, when the hour should come, In which by a New-Modell'd Jewish way, The King, their Nations Saviour, they would flay: And like Unchriftned Files when Martyrs fell, His Bloud by parcells for their Lucre fell. To fast and pray their * Leaders durst pretend, When to no rules of Heaven their Souls did bend: And could their prayers fo horridly Intrigue, As they still more Improv'd with Hell their League. And fince by Upftart force they much had won, And Men of place and dignity undone; They defy'd Scutch'ons because never said That Coats of Arms had Rebells famous made:

* Who for the most part were the meanest of their party, and of Low Extraction.

Or fuch, in Birth, did with Plebeians share. And ought, by right, to be disarmed there. Yet this truth could not their course Pride abate. Who raised were, in spite of Fame, by Fate. Their Rampant Wives and Daughters that before Had never comely Tire or Garment wore, Now pamper'd with best Meat and pleasing Wine. Chose their Gallants, and, Lady-like, kis'd fine. As thus depray'd of Mankind did afpire, And by their Monarch's death fought to rife higher: The Gen'rous English, who in Field before Had bravely fought to aid Majestique power, Now being confin'd to homes and full opprest By Methods which the Juncto's Votes exprest: Wish'd that their sep'rate Numbers could unite, And the' difarm'd with Armed Rebells fight. When many hearts that had before endear'd The Senates Cause, Abhorrers now appear'd,

As of that Body was a Faction made Of Men that endless Scenes of Mischief laid: And had appointed by their heinous power, To the Worlds wonder, their Kings dying hour. One worthy person who sometime had been A bold Complyer with the Houses Sin, At Midnight time did to the place arrive, Where a Caball was sitting to Contrive The Circumstance and manner of this deed, That to the Nations shame was to succeed. Half Naked was he, upright stood his hair; And like distracted Man his Eyes did stare: Who to them these words spake-Dumb for some days I've been, and at this time My Speech reftor'd by Heaven to speak your Crime. Too long alas, as my wounds may declare, I was affistant to your Cause in War.

A a 3

And

And now my Soul Englighten'd is to know What guilt was Mine, and how much worse you do. As you to Supreme wickedness Ascend, And guide the blow meant for your Soveraigns end In hope to plume your Junctos Callow State, Which before fledg'd shall with you dissipate; As your own Arm'd will fleight your fway and birth, And move you from your Seats with scornfull Mirth. Does Cromwell, your Uliffes, want deceit, Or Soul that fwells with hope of being great; Tho' low your heads prefumptuously he lays, And for his Brow Usurp Imperial Bays. But when his Bloudy Rule shall have an end, You shall with one another next Contend: Till Anarchy, the Leveller of State, Does give your confus'd force a finall date, As unto Royal Power without won field, Your Armed Bands and Nations hearts shall yield; Deftin'd Destin'd by Heaven, as its restoring day The Throne shall have an Admir'd splendid way: When Regicidall Patriots foon shall find That 'gainst their hearts an Arm of Steel's design'd. This and much more to me by Vision's shown, Which I this dreadfull Night to you must own. And if Fates terrors may your hearts unfear, Or flack the Iron Crimes yet harden'd there, Know with affright and forrow I beheld Your quarter'd Limbs on Towers and Steeples pil'd. And like your Treasons height erected high, Heads that on Bodies here I now espy. And Cromwell think, tho' Death-bed end you'l have, And with vast pomp born to an Usurp'd grave, Where for base Glory, amongst Royal dust, Your Carcasse shall be impudently thrust: That Sacred Vault it shall not defile long, Before thy Bones with Tyburn-Rebells throng.

Aa4

And

And as thy head did Monstrously aspire, Its Skeleton shall be advanced higher Then any loathed Skull whose brain with you Plotted both King and Nation to undo: Till yours and their vil'd reliques to dust fall, As the Suns angry Eye will burn 'em all. Enough I'ave faid, and if by heavens decree I'm Dumb again, and still so doom'd to be; The Sacred Power that prompted this address, If penitence it does on you impress, Will grant, for your fakes, when soe're I'm dead, That on my Grave that Epitaph be read. The Cruel Grandees when they heard this speech. That did their King-killing design Impeach. On which they plac'd their Avaricious aim, And thirst of Rule which did their hearts inflame: They bit their Lips, and with a haughty frown Denounc'd that he his Life should soon lay down;

Till when to their Loath'd Prison him they send, And haften with more rage their Monarchs end. Soon to the World did Fames loud Tongue relate The Kings diffress and his fad Nations fate: When Forreign hearts no less then English strove, For this Great Prince, to blaze their grief and Love. As passionately their Souls did apprehend That just dominion every where would end: Since Englands rule in him, on Earth the best, Could not upon its Royal Fabrick reft. Thus as the World had one great Mourner been, And fear'd the dire effects of Englands Sin, As Kings and Subjects did at once lament The Horrid Nature of that President: Like which none burden'd e're the Tongue of Fame, Or for Mans Overt-act had Treasons name; That 'gainst all Crowned Heads durst vent despight, And vulgars give, to rule at will, hold right.

Allarum'd

Allarum'd thus, Scepters and Mighty States Soon own'd themselves this Junctos opposites. Yet did to ferve King Charles fo condescend, As, by their leave, their Envoys low might bend To fuch who had no Right to feats they claim'd, And for their Actings worser far defam'd. But when the August Deputies appear'd, And Sov'raign Rule before vile Grandees clear'd, Letting 'em know th'Injustice of their cause, With its offence to Majesty and Laws: By Natures Scepter to Mankind convey'd, When the World her prime Monarchy obey'd. Nor could they fever Ligaments of State Which Heaven did in the Souls of Men create. Tho' Fortunes flur has on your Nation past. When for your fide Wars winning Dye was cast, Expect that she will soon her mean cheat scorn, Since you it rais'd, who to obey were born.

And if with due submission you'l rely of their video and? On duty, and your Princes Clemency: On A Like Envoys from great States we'l Intercede. And beg his Pardon for your boldest deed. The Grandees ftung to hear these words addrest, Which in the Worlds large fense their guilt exprest, and Bearing their Nofes high prefum'd to fay, That of their power and right they'd judge their way: What e're the dictates were that Forreign Prince Or testy States by Narratives dispense; Whose way ring Politicks, like Winds that blow O're Seas their Envoys, back and forward go: Whilst by a trifling Grandeur they afford Threats by Legations when fast sheath'd their Sword. Nor did we judge when our Votes did decree The Ruine of the English Monarchy, That Princes Souls, where State Intrigues reside, Could be to Kings Misfortune firm ally'd.

Since

Since by their practifed Maxims more they fear A Monarchs Grandeur then employ their care To support Prince, whose power successless falls, Or rounded by Wars straits for their aid calls. This our affurance was when first we arm'd, And next by bolder deeds the world allar'm'd; When your great States were calmly lookers on, Till our force had in field King Charles undone. Nor fear we, as prov'd Legions us furround, If denounc'd War on Sea and Land does found. Which told your Masters, Menacings they'l cease, And Court us next to be ally'd by Peace. Thus fpoke this daring Juncto, swell'd with Pride, As Crowns and States with fcorn they vilify'd: Of which some where, as verse must needs consess, Who to their difrepute did foon address, Below their greatness, such barefac'd Intrigues, As did with these vild Regicides make Leagues.

And shews that Kings distress'd like other Mortalls find The Courtly World in words, then deeds, more kind. Great Brittains Queen who left no means untry'd, That on this high concern could be apply'd; Which she from Mighty Potentates obtain'd, O're whom she judg'd her Royal Husband Reign'd A King of Hearts: And hop'd that the might hear (Since for his Life Crowns Intercessors were) Such comfort as would in her Soul allay The dismall thought of his Lifes ending day. Jon'W But finding that unhappy rumours flew With fad Novells, unto her grief found true; Her Soul, Heroick highly prov'd before, Had chose that juncture to avow it more, By all expressions that a Royal Wife Could make to fave her King, or with him end her Life. Who thought it was too Womanly to own That death should her destroy by grief alone;

Or not falute his Lip his dying day, And next his fall ask death the felf fame way: Of her Kings vile Condemners did defire * Pass-port to him, and with him to expire: " This T This offer, (tho" the Queen had been decreed By them to dye, as they durit vote the deed ? " Was held too great for their Sense to allow, Who wish'd her dead but fear'd to kill her fo. Thus was the Period of this mighty King, Whose end Three Kingdoms did to ruine bring, Presented by all such unhumane spight As could display Men Monsters unto fight. When on a Scaffold rais'd by Crimfon guilt, The Sacred Royal blond was to be fpilt; As in disguises, worse then Hangings bear When Ruffian Murderers are figur'd there,

To which purpose the Queen sent a Letter to Lenthall, the then Speaker of the pretended House of Commons.

Two Persons were in Beards and Vizards found. More dreadfull look'd then Bradshaw had fat gown'd: Defign'd by wicked Execution to compleat What he pronounc'd on his false Judgment Seat. By armed files that were to fee him dead. The Holy King to this dire Stage was led. Who but a Bishop, whom his Soul had chose For his Attendant, then defir'd to use; When standing on this Peerless Trayt'rous floor, His Royal Speech corrects their guilty power: Whilst gloriously, exceeding humane Race, Appear'd his words, his gesture, and his face. The Antick Villain, who the Axe must hand, Embolden'd was to strike by his Comman So highly great does his End raise his story Above what could have been his Earthly Glory: That even the Tragick Theatre of his fall, Adds reverence, by his death, unto Whitehall.

FINIS.

contriving str Mere dreadfull look a then Bide es had int go Defign'd by wicked Execution to complete What he pronounc'd on his falls Jud farms By armed files that were to fee him dead, The Holy King to this dire Stage was led. Who but a Biflion, whom his Stul had chofe For his Attendant, then defit'd to u.e; When flanding on this Pectlefs Traythous floor, His Royal Speech corrects their guilty power: While glorioully, exceeding humans Rade, See Appear'd his words, his gellute, and his fice. or The Antick Villain, who the Axe mail hand, Embolden'd was to fir ike by his Contman So highly great does his End tail his flory the Above what could have been his East aly Chery That even the Tragick Theatre of his fall, " Adds reverence, by his death, unto IFE helens,

FINIS

Mary Bird Book. 1206

G H2967.